"In addition to the inquiry regarding animals, etc., on the farm April 15, 1910, as explained previously, the census will seek to ascertain the quantity and value of all eggs, honey and wax produced on the farm in 1909.

Don't miss seeing W. B. Patton in "The Blockhead" at the Charlevoix Theater Friday evening September 17. 37-t-1

THEATRICAL

W. B. Patton Winning New Laurels

W. B. Patton adds another to his long list of dramatic triumphs in "The Blockhead"; as is the case with most artists, Mr. Patton started at the bottom rung and has played a wide range of parts. He is gifted with a personality that few comedians possess and his delightful rendition of "Prof. Theodore Blackson Heddington, the Blockhead, has been the crowning event of his starring career. It is a quaint and peculiar type. To his charm of person and quaintness of manner he adds the power of an apparently inexhaustible fund of ready pointed wit, and a voice which no one who has ever heard could ever forget. It is impossible to fittingly describe the peculiar effect that lies in his acting. In fact, he does not seem to be acting at all. There is a magnetism about him, refreshing in its cleanliness and simplicity, a kindly humor and an abiding confidence in human nature. He is the author of this play, as well as "The Minister's Son," "The Little Homestead," "A Sly Old Fox," "Royal Rags," "The Last Rose of Summer," "When We Were Friends," "The Slow Poke" and a number of other successes. The tour is under the personal direction of J. M. Stout, who has been associated with Mr. Patton for the past eight seasons, and the engagement here will be for one night only.

Difficult to Do.

A teacher in one of Brooklyn's public schools is a stickler for cleanliness. So often have orders come that cleanliness must be observed among the boys in her class that some of the urchins have even inquired of their parents when it means to manicure their finger nails.

Of course there is a "bad boy" in the class. One day the teacher said to him, "Tommy, do you know there is a great deal of dirt behind your ears?"

"There ain't neither," sassed Tommy.

"It is wrong to dispute me," said the teacher, "but you need not take my word for it. If you really do not believe me, look for yourself."—New York Times.

Pointer on Road Metaling.

Hillsboro county, Fla., has a considerable extent of good roads, about 100 miles approximately, most of which has been improved within a few recent years. One of the county commissioners in an interview recently laid particular stress on the necessity for an adequate thickness of metaling. He maintains that there should be of macadam construction at least eight inches of stone on the sides and ten inches in the center. Even more would add to the longevity of the road, in his judgment.

Cumulative Value of Good Highways.

Improved roads are breeders of traffic. Commerce invariably follows the line of the least resistance, and rarely is a good road constructed that much travel is not diverted to it from other courses. In addition to this, it may almost invariably be found that new industries, new and greater productions, spring up along the well built roads. With the added commerce comes added enlightenment, added salability, enlarged business and more and more developed and perfected citizenship.

New Method of Road Maintenance.

The road commissioners of a county in Georgia are considering a new plan for maintaining the highways. The idea is to organize a gang of road walkers, to be composed of free labor, that can be sent anywhere in the county on short notice and without the expense of guards, as in the case of convicts. Superintendent Whship will be supplied with an automobile so that he can traverse the 755 miles of roads in the county and plan out the work in advance.

MICHIGAN STANDS THIRD

Size of American Crops Increasing, and Soils Not Wearing Out.

In a bulletin being prepared by Prof. Milton Whitney of the bureau of soils of the department of agriculture, American crops are declared to be growing in size and soils are said to be not wearing out, as is popularly supposed. The bulletin shows that the average production of wheat per acre from 1855 to 1907 is 11.5 bushels in Michigan. Michigan is third in the list of states, which Vermont leads with 18.5 bushels.

The bulletin shows an increase in all cereal crops for the past three or four decades.

MANY POINTS ARE DECIDED

In Regard to Warner-Cramton Liquor Law

BY ATTORNEY GENERAL BIRD

Club Members are Allowed Individual Lockers

Railroads and Draymen can Deliver Wet Goods in Dry Counties—Other Interesting Decisions.

Inquiries have fairly poured into the attorney general's department regarding certain phases of the new Warner-Cramton general liquor law and the "search and seizure" local option law, and the department is sending out letters to many prosecuting attorneys and municipal officers regarding various points of the two acts.

A summary of the opinions given by Attorney General Bird on the points of most widespread interest is given out. Regarding the "search and seizure" law, which applies only to local option counties, he says, in answering a query as to the form physicans should use in prescriptions for liquor, that under the statute a mere order upon a druggist signed by a physician, to deliver a certain quantity of liquor to a certain person is not a compliance therewith. The prescription should be in the form in which prescriptions are regularly and commonly written and should specify the manner of using the liquor prescribed.

Two important questions were, first: "Can a club have it so arranged that each member can have a locker in the clubrooms and each one have his key to that locker and own the contents and when all the members or a part gather together, each go and take his own liquor and drink it himself; second, would it be a violation for a hotel keeper at a banquet to serve liquor brought by the parties being banqueted and owned by them and only served by the hotelkeeper?

The attorney general says he regarded it as doubtful whether the act would prohibit a club permitting its individual members keeping liquor in a locker, accessible only to the individual member and for his own personal use. It is added that it is doubtful whether the courts would hold a hotelkeeper to be a violator, who serves liquors other than his own liquors as stated in the question.

From Livingston county came the question as to whether a railway company may deliver liquor from any point in the state to a point in a local option county and whether a drayman delivering liquor to a private house violates the local option law. It is replied that the question turns upon whether the railway company or the drayman can be said to be furnishing intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the statute. The word "furnish" implies ownership, property in, dominion over or control, and it is not thought either the railway or the drayman can be said to be furnishing liquor within the meaning of the statute.

Regarding cider the attorney general says unfermented cider does not come within the statute and may be manufactured and sold in any quantity. Fermented cider it made from fruit grown within the county, may be sold in quantities not less than five gallons, and wine and cider may be manufactured in any quantity from fruit grown anywhere and that wine and cider so manufactured may be sold in any quantity outside the county except in local option counties.

Druggists must make the reports required whether they handle liquor or not. Sales of liquor for sacramental purposes may be made in local option counties without affidavit. Druggists may not sell liquor in local option counties to intoxicated persons, persons in the habit of getting intoxicated, or Indians, even upon the prescription of practicing physicians for medical purposes upon the regular prescriptions.

Taking up the questions relative to the Warner-Cramton law, it is stated that the use of the words "saloon" or "buffet" upon the inside or outside of a building where liquor is sold, are not in violation of the state law.

A sign that is a part of the design of the front window of a building appears upon the outside of the building just as much as though it were worked in as a part of the designs of the brick or steel front of the building. It is considered doubtful whether the courts would hold that a sign painted upon the inside of the window could be said to "appear upon" the outside as prohibited by the statute.

It is not believed that any picture or other advertisement of liquor in or near a show window so that it can be seen from the sidewalk in front of the building is prohibited. In determining the distance from the location of a proposed saloon to a church it is held that the measurement should be taken along the exterior line of the street.

All foreign companies selling alcohol or other liquors to retail, druggists in this state must pay the fee and furnish the bond required under the statute.

Discussing the words "police protection" in the statute as applied to townships it is held that such police protection is meant as is afforded under the laws of the state; that is, the constabulary of the township, and that consequently in townships of not less than 1,000 population exclusive of villages, where protection is provided under laws now in force, the township board may by taking action in conformity with the statute, permit saloons to remain open from 6 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock of week day nights, except election days and holidays.

It is held that cities which have previously adopted ordinances fixing the hours for opening and closing need not re-enact the old ordinances nor pass new ones if the ordinance is not inconsistent with the statute. All cities and incorporated villages, regardless of population, may extend the opening and closing hours from 6 o'clock in the morning to 11 o'clock at night by ordinance passed in conformity with their charter.

FOR CALIFORNIA

A. B. Fleischer Will Leave October 14

Where He Has Purchased Interest in Large Drug Business

A. B. Fleischer, proprietor of the Ivy Drug store, has formed a copartnership with Harry A. Starr, of Ludington, and purchased the Crane & Fairbanks drug stores, one of the largest stores in Santa Barbara, California. The deal was made the latter part of July, the new firm to take possession on or before November 1.

Mr. Starr has long been connected with the First National Bank of Ludington and is one of the most prominent businessmen of that city.

Mr. Fleischer started in business here eight years ago, buying the business of Luke & Jones, and by correct business methods has built up a constantly growing business. He will not dispose of his business here, but will devote his time here in the summer and in California in the winter, where he has taken the Rexall agency. During his absence the business here will be managed by Frank N. Metcalf. Mr. Fleischer expects to leave, with his family, for California about October 14. They will be much missed in business and church circles, but we are glad we are not to lose them entirely.

THEATRICAL

"The Great Divide" is to be presented under the direction of Henry Miller at the Charlevoix Theatre, Friday night, Sept. 24. A superb cast of talented players has been provided, and the entire production will be given here just as during the phenomenal run of over 500 nights in New York. The striking originality and unquestioned dramatic appeal of "The Great Divide" easily explain the unprecedented furore which William Vaughn Moody's masterful play has caused wherever the English language is understood. No play in the history of American drama has received such emphatic endorsement by dramatic reviewers.

AFTER FORTY-FOUR YEARS

Since They Parted at the Gates of Andersonville

George O. Scott and William Rogers Recognized Each Other

As two happy men as one can meet in a days journey have been in Charlevoix this week, George O. Scott of Port Orange, Florida, a former old resident of this city, and William Rogers of Albion. Both attended the reunion of their regiment at Traverse City last week and although forty-four years had passed since they last shook hands at the gates of Andersonville prison, each instantly recognized the other while at the table, at the mess tent in Traverse City and since that time have been together every minute of their time.

Very interesting is their account of experiences in Andersonville and at some future time we hope to be able to give some of them for the benefit of our readers.

Two Step club will hold dances again this winter. They will be held at Bakers' Inn. The first dance of the series will be held October 8. PAYTON A BOOSTER

Such are the Head Lines on an Article in Traverse City Eagle.

D. S. Payton, county clerk of Charlevoix county, was in the city today enroute for Ludington, where he goes to attend the annual meeting of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. Mr. Payton is enthusiastic in the consideration of the possibilities of this section of the state and, as he has the people of his entire county back of him, he is a specially strong man in the organization for development. He also stated to the Eagle that at the time of the meeting of the state grange here in December, Charlevoix county will make an exhibit of products of the orchards, farms and gardens which will be greatly appreciated by the people who come for the first time into the part of the state which they have always believed to be simply a lumber country.

Enrollment is Large.

The schools opened Monday morning, promptly on time, with the largest enrollment in the history of Charlevoix's schools, on the opening day there being two hundred and four in the primary, one hundred and forty eight in the grammar grades and one hundred and five in the High School with several more applications yet in. The Normal also starts out with an enrollment of eighteen, another record-breaker.

ANNUAL MEETING HELD LAST WEEK

Of the West Michigan Development Bureau at Ludington

REPORT OF DIRECTOR D. S. PAYTON

D. H. Day of Leelanau County, Elected President.

Work of Bureau is Bringing Results—From all Over the United States Inquiries are Pouring in.

Director Payton returned home Friday from Ludington where he attended the annual meeting of the West Michigan Development Bureau. Mr. Payton reports a very enthusiastic meeting and all sections entering in the work of preparing the exhibit with energy. The representatives of the transportation companies present promised to co-operate in every way in getting the exhibits to Chicago and storing them until needed.

To show how the work already has begun to have results Mr. Payton relates how the matter being sent out telling the good points of this region, has turned the minds of workers in the cities, who desire a piece of land, from the much advertised west, to western Michigan. Scenes of life and crops in western Michigan are being eagerly sought by the leading agricultural papers and the great dailies are using them in their Sunday editions.

Mr. Payton's report follows:

At the annual meeting of the West Michigan Development Bureau, held at Ludington, September 15th, ten counties were represented. Also Mr. Mitchell, representing the M. & N. E. R. R. Co., Mr. George of the P. M., Mr. Borton of the G. R. & I. and Mr. Church of the Northern Michigan Transportation Co.

After reading and approving of the treasurer's and secretary's reports the following officers were elected. President; D. H. Day, of Leelanau county, Vice-President; [illegible] Corkett, of Grand Traverse county, Secretary; T. M. Sawyer, of Mason county, Treasurer; B. R. Heudel of Manistee county.

The directors went over in detail with Mr. Rowe, the matter of the West Michigan exhibit, at Chicago, November 20th, to December 4th. Mr. Rowe reported all counties working in harmony, and made an elaborate report of the work that is being done through the advertisements of the bureau, and, in order to show that the seed sown by the bureau, has already taken root and is springing up and bearing fruit, Mr. Rowe reported that one hundred and forty-four papers of Michigan are now printing, regularly, facts of West Michigan, giving reports of crops raised by individual farmers, the fruit that has been and, is now being harvested by farmers of West Michigan, and illustrating the articles with cuts taken from photographs of the crops and fruit before and after harvesting. Mr. Rowe reported that he had requests from the Orange Judd Farmer, The Country Gentleman, The Rural New Yorker and some twelve or fourteen other papers and magazines of national reputation and circulation, for photographs of rural scenes in West Michigan; for this reason, the bureau is asking for photographs, that we may furnish the papers with them, and also have them for illustrations in the advertisements at Chicago and the weekly bulletin.

That your readers may fully understand the purpose of the West Michigan Development Bureau, and what it is doing, I quote the following from the Bulletin.

PURPOSE

The Bureau exists for the purpose of aiding in the development of Western Michigan. Its activity is along four co-ordinate yet distinct lines, viz.

1st. Advertising the natural advantages of Western Michigan to an extent sufficient to secure settlers.

2. Sounding the praises of the products of the region so as to cause new demands and open new markets.

3. Striving in behalf of the producer and consumers for the best possible transportation facilities.

1. Conducting an educational

Mrs. Dral Misenor returned to her home at East Jordan last Saturday after an extended visit with friends here. Later she leaves for Alma College where she joins her husband and where they will both receive instruction. Mr. Misenor taught our school for the last two years and both endeared themselves to the people here, both large and small, and while we regret losing them we congratulate them for being able to attend to a higher education and wish them every success.

E. Stanford of Boyne City, deputy state fish, game and forestry warden for the five adjoining counties made a visit along Horton Creek one day not long since, presumably prospecting for "crooks." Mr. Stanford has searched out and caused the arrest of several "crooks" in Emmet, Cheboygan and Charlevoix counties which shows that he is well adapted for his office and that he means business. It certainly behooves any chance "crook" to be very cautious of his whereabouts. While we would be sorry to see any one made trouble we still are glad to have the fish, game and birds protected.

CHAPTER III.

INTRODUCING HOLLINGSWORTH CHASE.

THE excitement attending the Skaggs-Wyckholme revelations had not yet spread to the grand duchy of Rapp-Thorberg, apparently lost as it was in the cluster of small units which went to make up a certain empire, one of the world powers. The Grand Duke Michael disdained the world at large. He had but little in common with anything that moved beyond the confines of his narrow domain. His court was sleepy, lackadaisical, unemotional, unprogressive to the taunts of progression. His people were thrifty, stolid and absolutely stationary in their loyalty to the ancient traditions of the duchy. His army was a mere matter of taxation and not a thing of pomp or necessity.

The precise location of the grand duchy in the map of the world has little or nothing to do with this narrative. Indeed, were it not for the fact that the grand duke possessed a charming and most desirable daughter the Thorberg dynasty would not be mentioned at all. The grand duke's peace of mind had been severely disturbed so severely. In fact, that he was transferring his troubles to the emperor, who, in turn, felt obliged to communicate with the United States ambassador, who, in his turn, had no other alternative than to take summary action in respect to the indiscretions of a fellow countryman. Chase's conscience was even and serene, and he was resigning his post with the confidence that he had performed his obligations as an American gentleman should, even though the performance had created an extraordinary commotion. Chase was new to the old world and its customs, especially those rigorous ones which surrounded royalty and denied it the right to venture into the common face.

Chase had been the representative of the American government at Thorberg for six months. The American flag floated above his doorway in the Friedrichstrasse, but in all his six months of occupation not ten Americans had crossed the threshold. He was a vigorous, healthy young man, and it may well be presumed that the situation bored him. He was not a politician; no more was he an office seeker. He was a real soldier of fortune in search of affairs—in peace or in war, on land or at sea. Possessed of a small income sufficiently adequate to sustain life if he managed to advance it to the purple age, but wholly incapable of supporting him as a thriftless diplomat, he was compelled to make the best of his talents, no matter to what test they were put. He left college at twenty-two, possessed of the praiseworthy design to earn his own way without recourse to the $4,500 income from a certain trust fund. His plan also incorporated the hope to save every penny of that income for the possible "rainy day." He was now thirty. In each of several New York banks he had something like $4,000 drawing 3 per cent interest, while he picked his blithe way through the world on $2,500 a year, more or less, as chance ordained.

"When I'm forty," Chase was wont to remark to envious spendthrifts who couldn't understand his philosophy, "I'll have over a hundred thousand there, and if I live to be ninety just think what I'll have. Moreover, I may get married and have to maintain a poor wife with rich relatives, which is a terrible strain, you know. You have to live up to your wife's relatives, if you don't do anything else."

He did not refer to the chance that he was quite sure to come in for a large legacy at the death of his maternal grandfather, a millionaire ranch owner in the far west.

After leaving college he drifted pretty much over the world, taking pot luck with fortune and clasping the hand of circumstance. There had been hard roads to travel as well as easy ones, but he never complained. He swung on through life with the heart of a soldier and the confidence of a pagan. He loathed business, and he abhorred trade.

He was an orphan and beholden to no man. No one had the right to question his actions after his twenty-first anniversary. He went in for law at Yale and then practiced restlessly, vaguely, for two years in Baltimore under the patronage of his father's oldest friend, a lawyer of distinction.

Tiring of the law books and reports in the old judge's office, he suddenly abandoned his calling and set forth to see the world. Almost before his friends knew that he had left he was heard of in Turkestan. In course of time he served as a war correspondent for one of the great newspapers, acted as agent for great hemp dealers in the Philippines, carried a rifle with the Boers in South Africa, hunted wild beasts in Asia and in Hottentot land, took snapshots in St. Petersburg and almost got to the north pole with one journey would you need a truer thoroughbred, a more agreeable chap, a more polished vagabond, than Hollings worth Chase, first lieutenant in Dame Fortune's army. Tall, good looking rawboned, cheerful, gallant, he was the true comrade of those merry, reckless volunteers from all lands who find commissions in Fortune's army and serve her faithfully.

He was nearly thirty when the diplomatic service began to appeal to him as a pleasing variation from the rigorous occupations he had followed heretofore. One of his uncles was a congressman and another was in some way connected with railroads. He first sought the influence of the latter and then the recommendation of the former. In less than six weeks after his arrival in Washington he was off for the city of Thorberg, in the grand duchy of Rapp-Thorberg, carrying with him an appointment as consul and supplied with the proper stamps and seal of office.

At the end of five months he loathed Thorberg; he hated the inhabitants; he smarted under the sting of royal disdain; he had no real friends, no boon companions, and he was obliged to be good! What wonder, then, that the bored, suffering, vivacious Mr. Chase seized the first opportunity to leap headforemost into the very thick of a most appalling indiscretion!

When he first arrived in Thorberg to assume his sluggish duties he was not aware of the fact that the grand duke had an unmarried daughter, the Princess Genevra.

She was visiting in St. Petersburg or Berlin or some other place when he reached his post of duty, and it was toward the end of his fifth month before she returned to her father's palace in Thorberg. He awoke to the importance of the occasion and took some slight interest in the return of the royal young lady, even going so far as to follow the crowd to the railway station on the sunny June afternoon.

He saw the princess for the first time that afternoon, and he was bowled over, to use the expression of his English friends with whom he dined that night. She was the first woman that he had ever looked upon that he could describe, for she was the only one who had impressed him to that extent. This is how he pictured her at the American legation in Paris a few weeks later:

"Ever see her? Well, you've something to live for, gentlemen. I've seen her but three times, and I don't seem able to shake off the spell. You've never seen such hair. Gad, it's as near like the kind that Heuner painted as anything human could be, except that it's more like old gold, if you can understand what I mean by that. Not bronze, mind you, nor the raw red, but—oh, well, I'm not a novelist, so I can't halfway describe it. She's rather tall—not too tall, mind you—five feet five, I'd say—whatever that is in the metric system. Slender and well dressed—oh, that's the strangest thing of all! Well dressed! Think of a princess being well dressed! I'd say she's twenty-two or twenty-three years of age—not a minute older. I think her eyes are a very dark gray, almost blue. Her skin is like a—a—oh, let me see! What is there that's as pure and soft as her skin? Something warm, and pink, and white, d'ye see? Well, never mind. And her smile! And her frown! You know, I've seen both of 'em, and one's as attractive as the other. She's a real princess, gentlemen, and the prettiest woman I've ever laid my eyes upon. And to think of her as the wife of that blithering little ass, that nincompoop of a Karl Brabetz! She loathes him, I'm sure—I know she does. And she's got to marry him! That's what she gets for being a grand duke's daughter. Brabetz is the heir apparent to some duchy or other over there and is supposed to be the catch of the season. You've heard of him. He was in Paris this season and cut quite a figure—a prince with real money in his purse, you know. I wonder why it is that our American girls can't marry the princes who have money instead of those who have none. Not that I wish any of our girls such bad luck as Brabetz! I'll stake my head he'll never forget me!" Chase concluded, with a sharp, reflective laugh in which his hearers joined, for the escapade which inspired it was being sicly discussed in every embassy in Europe.

But to return. The advent of the princess put fresh life into the slow going city and court circles. Charming people whom Chase had never seen before seemed to spring into existence suddenly; the streets took on a new air; the bands played with a keener zest, and the army primed itself into a most amazingly presentable shape. Chase could hardly believe his success. He lifted up his chin, threw out his chest, banished the look of discontent from his face and announced to himself that Thorberg was not such a bad place after all.

For days he swung blithely through the streets, the hangdog look gone from his eyes, always hoping for another glimpse of the fair sorceress who had worked the great transformation. It was two weeks before he saw her the second time. He was more enchanted by her face than before, especially as he came to realize the astonishing fact that she was kind enough to glance in his direction from time to time.

It was during the weekly concert in the Kursaal late one night. She came in with a party, among whom he recognized several of the leading personages at court.

Chase sat at a table with the French attaché just below the box occupied by the princess and her party. In spite of the fact that he was a gentleman born and bred he could not conquer countless impulses to look at the flower face of the royal maiden.

Gradually the program led up to the feature of the evening, the rendition of a great work under the direction of a famous leader, a special guest of the amiable loving duke.

Chase arose and cheered with the assemblage when the distinguished director made his appearance. Then he proceeded to forget the man and his genius—in fact, everything save the rapt listener above him. She was leaning forward on the rail of the box, her chin in her hand, her eyes looking steadily ahead, enthralled by the music. Suddenly she turned and looked squarely into his eyes, as if impelled by the magnetism they unconsciously employed. A little flush mounted to her brow as she quickly resumed her former attitude. Chase cursed himself for a brainless lout.

The number came to an end, and the crowd arose to cheer the bowing, smiling director. Chase cheered and shouted "Bravo!" too, because she was applauding as eagerly as the others. She called the flushed, bowing director to her box and publicly thanked him for the pleasure he had given. Chase saw him kiss her hand as he murmured his gratitude. For the first time in his life he coveted the occupation of an orchestra leader.

The director was a frail, rather good looking young man, with pleading black eyes that seemed too loud in their scrutiny of the young lady's face. Chase began to hate him. He was unreasonably thankful when he passed on to the box in which the duke sat.

The third and last time he saw the Princess Genevra, before his sudden, spectacular departure from the grand duchy was at the duke's reception to the nobility of Rapp-Thorberg and to the representatives of such nations of the world as felt the necessity of having a man there in an official capacity.

CHAPTER IV.

THE INDISCREET MR. CHASE.

THERE was not a handsomer, more striking figure in the palace gardens on the night of the reception than Hollingsworth Chase nor one whose poise proved that he knew the world quite as well as it is possible for any one man to know it. His was a subtle figure also, for he was easily distinguishable as the only American in the brilliant assemblage.

He was presented to the princess late in the evening, together with Baggs of the British office. His pride and confidence received a severe shock. She glanced at him with unaffected welcome, but with the air of one who was looking upon his face for the first time.

He could not again approach within speaking distance of the princess, nor did he presume to make the effort. Chase knew his proper place. She was the gayest, the most vivacious being in the whole assemblage. She had but to stretch out her hand or project her smile and every man in touch with the spell was ready to drop at her feet. At last she led her court off toward the pavilion under which the royal orchestra was playing. As if it were a signal, every one turned his steps in that direction. Chase and the Englishman had been conversing diligently with an ancient countess and her two attractive daughters near the fountain.

Again the dapper director came forward to lead the musicians, and again he was most enthusiastically received. This time Chase was not where he could watch the princess. He found, therefore, that he could devote his attention to the music and the popular conductor. He was amazed to find that the fellow seemed to be inspired. He was also surprised to find himself

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

Entered at Charlevoix Postoffice as second class matter.

A question that is asked us many times is who will be our neighbors in Van Pelt's new cement block. We have to confess ignorance but do know of some movements that have been made.

One is that Van Pelt was asked to make a proposition to the Masonic Lodge for the rental of his two new halls in the cement block on Van Pelt place, and that he did, but owing to some unexpected opposition to leave present quarters, and Mr. Van Pelt not wishing to cause any dissension in the lodge, he promptly withdrew his offer the next morning.

During the next few days it was explained to him that the matter was not thoroughly understood and he again consented to let the offer stand until the next regular meeting of the lodge.

The COURIER is thoroughly interested in this movement and can assure the members of the lodge, who have not seen these two halls, that they are very fine and commodious and well fitted for lodge purposes, and we want you for our neighbors. We extend to you one and all the right hand of fellowship even if we cannot give you the grip.

Van Pelt Place will be one of the prettiest and busiest little places in our city when Van Pelt gets through with the block he is now building on the corner of Bridge street.

WEST OVER-RATED

Is the Opinion of Charles Hudkins of Wilson Township

Charles Hudkins returned on Saturday last from an extended trip to the West. While away he visited his father, Marion Hudkins, and his sister, Mrs. Willis Kocher who are now living in Alberta. He says that the Canadian Northwest is a fine country for grain and stock raising, but is not at all adapted to raising fruit or vegetables. Mr. Hudkins also visited the Seattle exposition and spent considerable time in the famous fruit growing region of Washington and Oregon. He says that the West has been greatly overrated, the soil not being as good as that of Northern Michigan and the fruit raised being inferior in quality and quantity to that here at home. The West will always be handicapped by their distance from market which makes for high freight charges. Just at present however, the West seems to be very popular and land values are soaring. It is to be hoped that the good work being done by the Western Michigan Development Bureau in advertising the advantages and possibilities of this region will turn the attention of the public to the fact that in fruit growing at least Western Michigan beats the world.—Enterprise.

COMMUNICATED.

The potato buyers organization having made their prices to be paid this fall for potatoes to be from 25 to 30 cents a bushel, and also to kill competitors, divided the territory, giving each buyer a town to himself, so he could make his own price. Under this condition and knowing that we have 200,000 acres or 15 per cent more potatoes planted in the United States this year than was last year, the farmers Society of Equity has come to the rescue of the potato growers of Michigan, and by pledging the crop, will secure the farmer an equitable price. Pledges will be circulated in all the townships of the potato producing counties as soon as possible.

Dr. Gerow, the Cheboygan apple king, gave out four thousand packages of flower and garden seeds to the children of that city last spring, and a flower show recently was the result, besides dotting the city with many beautiful flower gardens during the summer. The Cheboygan Democrat says in this regard:

"Young people that have never taken any interest in flowers and garden raising have became enthusiasts, and have devoted much of their vacation time to tending to their pretty little patches of flowers and garden truck. It is proposed to make this a permanent affair, and perhaps for each to have charge of the work in the future."

Harry Swazey, sent up from this part of the county on a statutory charge, was found guilty by the jury last Thursday after ten minutes of deliberation. On Tuesday Swazey was sentenced to from 15 to 30 years in the state prison at Marquette, where he was taken the same day by deputy sheriffs Ward Baker and William Edgerton. Swazey was known as a desperate criminal. He attempted to escape while awaiting trial, and had served four and a half years previously for burglarly, going up from Isabella county.—Pellston Journal.

In western Michigan there are 18 steam railway systems with 1,610 miles of main track, and over 400 loading stations. There are two electric railway lines, with 79 miles of track and 23 regular stations. There is one mile of main track for every 3.7 square miles of land surface. There is not a point in the entire district that is over 12 miles from the railroad track.

Mrs. John Hunn, who was said to be the largest woman in Crawford county was buried last week in a casket which was built to order at an Owosso plant. The casket was so large that it could not be taken in the door of the Hunn home, and the woman's body was brought out on the lawn and placed in it. Mrs. Hunn was 60, and weighed nearly 550 pounds. She has two sisters who are nearly as large as she. A husband, two daughters and two sons survive.

With the final crash of the orchestra he found himself shouting again with the others. Oddly, this time he was as mad as they. A score or more of surprised, disapproving eyes were turned upon him when he yelled "Encore!"

"There will be no encore," admonished the fair girl at his side kindly. "It is not New York," she added, with a sly smile.

Ten minutes later Chase and the Englishman were lighting their cigars in an obscure corner of the gardens.

"Extraordinarily beautiful," Chase murmured reflectively as he seated himself upon the stone rolling along the drive.

"Yes, they say he really wrote it himself," drawled Baggs, puffing away.

"I'm not talking about the music," corrected Chase sharply.

"Oh!" murmured Baggs apologetically. "The night?"

"No; the princess, Baggs. Haven't you noticed her?" with intense sarcasm in his tone.

"Of course I have, old chap. By Jove, do you know she is good looking—positively rippling."

They lazily observed the approach of one couple, attracted no doubt by the disparity in the height of the two shadows. The man was at least half a head shorter than his companion, but his ardor seemed a thousandfold more vast. Chase was amused by the apparent intensity of the small officer's devotion, especially as it was met with a coldness that would have chilled the fervor of a man much larger and therefore more fluid. It was impossible to see the faces of the couple until they passed through a moonlit streak in the walk quite close at hand.

Chase started and grasped his companion's arm. One was the Princess Genevra and—was it possible? Yes, the minute conductor—the sensation of the hour, the musical lion! Moreover, to Chase's cold horror, the "little freak" was actually making violent love to the divinity of Rappe-Thorberg!

The princess had not seen the two men, nor had the fervent conductor, whose impassioned French was easily distinguishable by the unwilling listeners. The sharp, indignant "No" of the princess, oft repeated, did much to relieve the pain in the heart of her American admirer. Finally, with an unmistakable cry of anger, she halted not ten feet from where Chase sat, as though he had become a part of the stone rail.

"I have asked you not to touch me, sir! Is not that enough? If you persist I shall be compelled to appeal to my father again. The whole situation is loathsome to me. Are you blind? Can you not see that I despise you? I will not endure it a day longer. You promised to respect my wishes."

"How can I respect a promise which condemns me to purgatory every time I see you?" he cried passionately. "I adore you. You are the queen of my life, the holder of my soul. Genevra, Genevra, I love you! My soul, for one tender word, for one soft caress! Ah, do not be so cruel! I will be your slave!"

"Enough! Stop, I say! If you dare to touch me!" she cried, drawing away from her tormentor, her voice trembling with anger. The little conductor's manner changed on the instant. He gave a snarl of rage.

"By heaven, I'll make you pay—for this some day! You shall learn what a man can do with a woman such as you are! You"—

Just at that moment a tall figure leaped from the shadows and confronted the quivering musician. A heavy hand fell upon his collar, and he was almost jerked from his feet, half choked, half paralyzed with alarm. Not a word was spoken. Chase whirled the presumptuous suitor about until he faced the gates to the garden. Then, with more force than he realized, he applied his boot to the person of the offender—once, twice, thrice!

The princess stared, wide eyed and unbelieving, upon the brief tragedy. She saw her tormentor hurled viciously toward the gates and then, with new alarm, saw him pick himself up from the ground, writhing with pain and anger. His sword flashed from its scabbard as, with a scream of rage, he dashed upon the tall intruder. She saw Chase—even in the shadows she knew him to be the American—she saw Chase lightly leap aside, avoiding the thrust for his heart. Then, as if he were playing with a child, he wrested the weapon from the conductor's hand, snapped the blade in two pieces and threw them off into the bushes.

"Skip!" was his only word. It was a command that no one in Rappe-Thorberg ever had heard before.

"You shall pay for this!" screamed the conductor, tugging at his collar. "Scoundrel! Dog! Beast! What do you mean? Murderer! Robber! Assassin!"

"You know what I mean, you little shrimp!" roared Chase. "Stop! Don't hang around here a second longer or I'll—." And he took a threatening step toward his adversary. The latter turned tail and ran twenty paces or more in heartbreaking time, then, realizing that he was not pursued, stopped and shook his first at his assailant.

"Come, Genevra," he gasped, but she remained as if rooted to the spot. He waited an instant and then wilted rapidly away in the direction of the palace. Baggs grasped Chase by the shoulder, shook him and exclaimed when it was too late:

"You blooming ass, do you know what you've done?"

"The —— miserable cur was annoying the princess," muttered Chase, straightening his cuffs, vaguely realizing that he had interfered too hastily.

"Confound it, man, he's the chap she's going to marry."

"Marry?" gasped Chase.

"The hereditary prince of Brobeiz—Karl Brubetz."

"Good Lord!"

"You must have known."

"How the dev— Of course I didn't know," groaned Chase. "But, bang it all, man, he was annoying her. She was flouting him for it. She said she despised him. I don't understand."—

The princess came forward into the light of the path. There was a quaint little wrinkle of mirth about her lips, which trembled nevertheless, but her eyes were full of solicitude.

"I'm sorry, sir," she began nervously. "You have made a serious mistake. But," she added frankly, holding out her hand to him, "you meant to defend me. I thank you."

Chase bowed low over her hand, too bewildered to speak. Baggs was pulling at his mustache and looking nervously in the direction which the prince had taken.

"He'll be back here with the guard," he stuttered.

"He will go to my father," said Genevra, her voice trembling. "He will be very angry. I am sorry, indeed, that you should have witnessed our—our scene. Of course you could not have known who he was."

"I thought he was a— But in any event, your highness, he was annoying you," supplemented Chase eagerly. "You will forgive me if I've caused you even greater, graver annoyance. What can I do to set the matter right? I can explain my error to the duke. He'll understand."

"Perhaps—perhaps you'd better go at once," said the princess, rather pathetically. "My father will not overlook the indignity to—to my—to his future son-in-law. I am afraid he may take extreme measures."

"Forgive me," muttered the hapless Chase.

"It would not be proper in me to say that I could bless you for what you have done," she said, so naively that he lifted his eyes to hers and let his heart escape heavenward.

"The whole world will call me a bungling, stupid ass for not knowing who he was," said Chase, with a wretched smile.

"If I were you I'd never confess that I did not know who he was," she said. "Let the world think that you did know. It will not laugh then. If you can trust your friend to keep the secret I am sure you can trust me to do the same."

Again Chase was speechless—this time with joy. She would shield him, from ridicule!

"And now please go! It grieves me to feel that I may be the unhappy cause of misfortune to you."

"No misfortune can engulf me now," murmured he gallantly. Then came the revolting realization that she was to wed the little parasite. The thought burst from his lips before he could prevent: "I don't believe you want to marry him. He is the duke's choice. You"—

"And I am the duke's daughter," she said sweetly, a touch of bitterness in her voice. "Good night. Goodby. I am not sorry that it has happened."

She turned and left them, walking swiftly among the trees. A moment later her voice came from the shadows, quick and pleading.

"Hasten," she called softly. "They are coming. I can see them."

"It's a devil of a mess," sighed Baggs when they were far from the wall. "I'm sure it will cost you your job, if nothing else. You'll be relieved before tomorrow night, my word for it. And you'll be lucky if that's all. The duke's a terror. I don't for the life of me see how you failed to know who the chap really is."

"An Englishman never sees a joke until it is too late, they say. This time it appears to be the American who is slow witted. What I don't understand is why he was leading that confounded band."

"My word, Chase, everybody in Europe, except you, knows that Brabetz is a crank about music—composes, directs and all that. He's a confounded little bounder just the same. He's mad about music and women and doesn't care a hang about wine—the worst kind, don't you know. I say it's a shame she has to marry him. But that's the way of it with royalty, old chap. You Americans don't understand it. They have to marry one another whether they like it or not. But, I say, you'd better come over and stop with me tonight. It will be better if they don't find you just yet."

Three days later a man came down to relieve Chase of his office. He was unceremoniously supplanted in the duchy of Rappe-Thorberg.

It was the successful pleading of the Princess Genevra that kept him from serving a period in durance vile.

HIDDEN DANGERS

Nature Gives Timely Warnings That No Charlevoix Citizen Can Afford to Ignore

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 1 comes from the kidney secretions. They will warn you when the kidneys are sick. Well kidneys excrete a clear, amber fluid. Sick kidneys send out a thin, pale and foamy, or a thick, red, ill smelling urine, full of sediment and irregular of passage.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 2 comes from the back. Back pains, dull and heavy, or sharp and acute, tell you of sick kidneys and warn you of the approach of dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease. Letter from Van Pelt

Norwood, Charlevoix County,
Monday, September 20, 1909.

Oh ye resorters who were frightened away by our first cold spell, which comes regularly every year between August twentieth and September fifth, could you only have remained a few days longer and enjoy the soft balmy days we are now having, you surely would remain next year as we old timers do through September and October and some years it is simply beautiful up to Thanksgiving.

No country can excel and I know of none that can equal us during these autumnal days and evenings.

Moral: Stay over next year and not only enjoy the delightful weather but the fine fruit as well. Our country is fast developing into a fruit growing country and when you visit the great fruit show at the Coliseum in Chicago, which is to be held from October twentieth to November fifth, do not forget to look for the fruit grown in Charlevoix county. We expect to carry away laurels as we did at the Centennial in Philadelphia and the World's Fair in St. Louis.

Yours truly,
GEORGE H. VAN PELT.

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction Sale

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars work of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised; these are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction sales write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising will do.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

Courier Grange Column

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

Brother D. S. Payton, who is chairman of the committee to prepare and make an exhibiton of the products of the farms of Charlevoix county, at the State Grange next December, while in Traverse City last week secured an allotment of space in the rooms reserved for exhibiting the products of northern Michigan, for Charlevoix county. To make this exhibit creditable to the county and of the value which it should and will be, means that every subordinate grange should get busy.

To outline his plans and explain the plans of the Traverse City people Mr. Payton requests every subordinate master in the county to meet him at the fair grounds, East Jordan, Grange Day, September 29. Mr. Payton also will be at the third district convention to be held with Pine Lake Grange, Saturday, and desires as many patrons as possible to be present. The county lecturer will also be at Pine Lake Saturday and desires to meet as many patrons from that section as he can to arrange for work in that section. The next meeting of Pomona will be held with Pine Lake Grange, October 14 and will be attended by State Master Hull.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Under head of "suggestions for good of the order," Bro. George Todd offered hints to degree team about manner of introducing candidate.

Two visitors from Deer Lake grange were present.

An interesting program was rendered consisting of readings, recitations, songs and music.

Grange closed after which the newly organized degree team practiced in third and fourth degree work.

Horton's Bay Grange No. 833.

Horton Bay grange met Friday evening, September 17, with an attendance of ten, Worthy Master George Long presiding.

After the usual order of business delegates were elected to the county convention.

Owing to the small attendance the lecture hour was omitted until next meeting, October 1, when we hope to have a better attendance.

South Arm Grange, No. 815, met in regular session Saturday, September 11th, 1909.

Recess, after which Mr. and Mrs. Coulter and Mr. and Mrs. Milford were instructed in the third and fourth degrees and a fourth degree supper served.

The main feature of the lecturer's hour was a musk-melon eating contest. The contestants were H. L. Olney and Walter Burbanks against Nathan Liskum and S. E. Coulter. Olney and Burbanks won, eating their melon in one minute and thirty seconds.

Grange closed in form.

Met again Saturday evening September 18.

The committee on the pie social returned an account of $4.75, moved, supported and carried that we hold a dance Friday evening September 24. Moved supported and carried that we have a library contest Reuben Murphy and Minnie Crawford were appointed captains, sides were chosen and a schedule of points adopted. F. W. St. Johns, Secil Blair, George Crawford and Mary Crawford were elected delegates to the county convention. We then had lecture hour which consisted of song, recitations and a discussion of the fair. Grange closed in form.

Greatest Yield of Beets.

The indications are that the greatest yield of sugar beets ever harvested in Michigan is going to be pulled when the work of extracting them from the ground commences next month. Sugar beet fields never looked so fine in the Thumb as this year and thousands of acres are planted in that portion of the sugar district. The acreage this year is larger than ever before so that with the fine prospect for large beets of high sugar content, it is believed that the value of the crop will, when turned into sugar, pass the $10,000,000 mark.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Co-operating with the U. S. Good Roads Division

The postoffice is giving its hearty indorsement to the demand for good roads being heard throughout the length and breadth of the land. While the department cannot do anything officially, it can, in the nature of things, cooperate with the Department of Agriculture, division of good roads, and the fourth assistant postmaster general has been able to materially help the general cause through the avenues of the rural free delivery system.

The department has for several years been endeavoring, within the limits of its jurisdiction, to secure the improvement of highways. It is essential to the prompt delivery and collection of mail that roads over which the rural free delivery service is operated shall be maintained in condition to be traveled with ease and facility at all seasons of the year.

Whenever report is made to the department that roads on which a rural route is established, are in bad condition, causing the service to be delayed or suspended, the road's officials, postmasters and patrons are immediately notified that unless steps are taken to improve the condition of the highways service will be discontinued in that particular section. These notices usually result in prompt and favorable action, and when ignored the service is withdrawn until such time as the roads are placed in good condition.

If you like to see good races go to the County Fair at East Jordan next week. 38-t-1

VOL. 27. NUMBER 39 | CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1909 | PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

HOW THE TAXES ARE EXPENDED

As Raised in Charlevoix County for State Purposes

OVER TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS

Will Be Paid by Charlevoix County Taxpayers

Largest Amounts Go for Asylums and University of Michigan—Total for State, $5,929,719.74

We have heard so much about the increased taxtation for this year that a study of the figures which have just been given out will be of interest to every citizen. In addition to the matter of state taxes covered in a general way, County Clerk Payton furnishes us with a statement showing just where the money paid in by Charlevoix taxpayers, will be expended. This is worthy of careful study as few taxpayers have ever had this table brought before them.

This year's total state tax budget calls for a total of $5,929,719.71, which is $1,011,850.07 more than asked for last year. This year's rate is about three and forty-one hundredths mills on the dollar while last year it was 2,817 mills on the dollar, leaving a higher rate of only about sixtenths mills on the dollar.

This is in face of the fact that this is the big year, every other year being known as the big year, and more money was appropriated for different causes than ever before in the history of the state by the last legislature. In fact money is to be raised this year for 63 different funds, whereas last year the number was only 58. Then the growth of the state and the increase in different institutions makes a bigger demand for running expenses and too, the past year has been recognized as a year in which living and running expenses were high and all of these things taken together means much in conducting the affairs of Michigan's 41 State institutions and departments to say nothing of the other expenses, such as carrying on the work of running the business, etc. Then the expenses of the last legislature for compensation alone amounted to $105,000; the printing of the laws and carrying on the work of the session was another item.

When all these and a large number of similar items which might be mentioned are taken into consideration, it will be seen that the expenses of running the state have not been as much as its active and industrial activities would indicate.

The amount of state tax apportioned to Charlevoix county for the year of 1909, and the purpose for which it is apportioned is as follows:

MOST FAVORED REGION

In the Opinion of E. B. Ward and Henry Block

After Observations on Trip Across Country from Grand Rapids.

E. B. Ward and Henry Block returned from Grand Rapids Wednesday afternoon, driving through an auto-truck to be used in gathering cream for the X L Produce Company. In addition to driving through from Grand Rapids they drove from Grand Rapids to Coopersville, Holland and other points, giving them a good opportunity to compare the condition of crops, etc. in that portion of Michigan with this.

Mr. Ward informs us that he never before realized what a favored region this was until he made this trip. The further south he was, the more the farmers were behind in their work, where the early frosts have left them crops to harvest. Another point, for farmers to consider, which they observed on the trip, was the line roads in the counties which were under the county road system, although the roads in this region were found far superior, whether under the county system or not.

HUDSON TOWNSHIP

Is In Line With the Rest of the County

In the Growing of Fruit Farm of L. F. Knowles.

Friday's Boyne Citizen gives the following account of a visit to the farm of Hon. L. F. Knowles in Hudson township which proves that that township is in line with the rest of the county.

Last week we visited the farm of L. F. Knowles, situated in Hudson township, about seven miles north of Boyne Falls. On this farm of about 500 acres, of which about 80 acres are cleared, is situated an orchard that for its product none has any better, although some in the county may equal. The trees are about ten years old and when we visited there last week many of them were propped up on account of the immense weight of the fruit. The apples were the prettiest we have seen this year and all are large and juicy. In two hours two men, while the writer was there, picked 21 bushels and there will probably be close to 500 bushels of apples in the orchard.

We have often heard of this farm and we think we can truthfully say it is one of the best in Charlevoix county. Presided over by Geo. Cummings and wife. On the farm also lives L. F. Knowles' father, Jas. Knowles.

Mr. Knowles, Sr. has a garden spot on this farm that is a beauty. This spring he planted a cucumber bed of those called snake cucumbers, and when we visited there he showed us still growing on the vines two cucumbers that measured as follows: One cucumber measured 4 feet 5 inches from tip to tip, and the other 2 inches longer.

NEWMAN-STANBAUGH

Pretty Autumn Wedding at Home of Governor Fifer

Marion Township Farmer Marries Lady From Illinois.

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was held Saturday evening, Sept. 25 at the summer home of Governor and Mrs. Joseph W. Fifer on the Belvedere Resort.

Mr. Austin Newman and Miss Ida Stanbaugh were the happy pair. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Holden A. Putnam, of the Congregational church of this city. The house was attractively decorated with flowers and beautiful autumn leaves which gave a festive air to the occasion.

After the ceremony the guests partook of delicious refreshments and then viewed the many gifts which the bride had received.

The groom is a resident of Charlevoix, having spent all his life with his parents at the family home south of town.

He is an estimable young man, who is both well and favorably known in this community. The bride has spent the past two summers in Charlevoix, her home being in Bloomington, Illinois, where she has many friends who will be delighted to hear of this nuptial event and who wish her well. The list of the wedding guests is Mrs. Harriet Newman, Miss Julia Newman, Mr. E. H. Newman, and Mr. John Henry Newman all of Charlevoix, and Governor and Mrs. Joseph W. Fifer and Mr. and Mrs. Herman W. Fifer of Bloomington, Illinois.

SELLING MORE TREES

As Result of Work of West Michigan Development Bureau.

Clarence J. Kirby of the Monroe Nursery company has been in Grand Traverse county for the past few days looking after the firm's trade for the next spring delivery. In an interview with an Eagle representative he stated that while he had been there he had sold five carloads of cherry trees and that nursery prospects were never better than this season. He also said: "Grand Traverse is the coming fruit section of the state and conditions are better adapted for fruit growing than in any other section of the country without exception."

Mr. Kirby also thinks that the Western Michigan Development Bureau will be the means of bringing this section to the front as no other means possibly could. The farmers are now realizing that they have great possibilities within their grasp and are ordering fruit trees in larger quantities than at any previous season. Cherry trees are the most in demand, and in several localities new tracts are being cleared for planting next spring.—Traverse City Eagle.

WILL BE MOVED

Post Office Department Accepts Mr. Van Pelt's Offer

To Fit Up New Building for Post Office Purposes

Word was received last week that the post office department had accepted Mr. Van Pelt's offer and the post office would be moved into the new building, now in course of erection, corner of Bridge street and Van Pelt place. When completed Charlevoix will have one of the finest postoffices to be found in Michigan. The entire first floor will be used for office purposes, furnished in the most modern manner. The floors will be tiled and all the windows will be of heavy plate glass with prisms. The basement will be lighted in the same way and will be as well fitted up as the other floors.

The upper story will be divided into four suits of rooms, especially fitted up for office purposes, with hot and cold water, lavatories, and reception rooms. Everything being of the very best to be secured.

It is hoped that with the new office the officials and patrons will work together to keep the office in a condition which will be in harmony with its new home. Each must do their part and now is the time to resolve it shall be done.

ODD-FELLOWS CELEBRATE

Official Instructor Kennedy Visits Fraternity.

Wednesday night was a great night in the history of the Odd-fellow fraternity in this city, it being the time set for the visit of W. R. Kennedy, of Mt. Pleasant, official instructor for Michigan.

Over sixty members of Round Lake lodge were present, besides visitors from Newark, Texas, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, Grand Rapids, Mt. Pleasant, Petoskey, Ithaca, Hellaire, Boyne City and Bay Shore.

The first degree was exemplified by the first degree team of Round Lake lodge, under the captainship of Charles Jefferies, the candidates being Wesley Howard, Z. A. Young and George Johnson.

Mr. Kennedy exemplified the work of the order in a manner which gained the approval of all present and the general opinion of the fraternity was that Mr. Kennedy was the right man for the place of Grand Instructor.

CONFERENCE OF SCHOOL OFFICERS

Held at Court House Thursday Well Attended

The conference of school officers held at the court house Thursday, was well attended, every part of Charlevoix county being represented with officers and patrons who took a lively interest in the meeting.

Owing to the inability of Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright to be present, Deputy Superintendent Keeler took his place. As this was the first meeting of the kind held in the state under the new law, the interest taken was highly gratifying to both Commissioner Milford and Mr. Keeler.

CHARLEVOIX AND HAYES TOWNSHIPS

Are the Homes of Progressive Farmers

WHO ARE MAKING A SUCCESS

In the Raising of Fruit and all Other Crops

Beautiful Farm Homes and Well Kept Orchards Are to be Seen on Every Hand—Are Alive to Possibilities

Last week it was our good fortune to accompany County Clerk Payton and the photographer on their mission of securing views of farm scenes to advertise the glorious possibilities of Charlevoix county, to the people, who are listening to the cry of back to the land and seeking a patch of ground which they may call their own, and lure them away from the siren call of the west.

The trip this time was taken through the townships of Charlevoix and Hayes. The first stop was made at the farm of George Durance, where a fine view was taken of Mr. Durance's cabbage patch. Mr. Durance also has a crop of potatoes and a strawberry patch worth going miles to see. The next stop was made at the Waller farm, where the well kept buildings and the acres of orchards make a show place which will well repay a visit to them; here a view was taken of the buildings, also plum trees loaded down with fruit.

Passing into Hayes we stopped at the orchard of LeRoy Hamlin and secured a view of his orchard which has been well cared for. Passing by the farms of Henry Hamlin, where a barn which is highly creditable to Charlevoix county is being finished, the Jerrichow farm and others which were equal to those we stopped at, we ran up to E. G. Wightman's to secure a view of a field of squash and a field of corn, which proves that Hayes township raises corn.

Our next stop was made at Frank Sneathen's, which bears all the marks of an up-to-date farmer, here we took a view of a grape arbor loaded with fruit. Next we visited the Sand-bed farm, owned by E. E. Stroud, and secured a view of his silo also an apple tree well fruited. The beautiful farm home of Fred Sneathen next claimed our attention. One could travel miles, in any part of the United States, without seeing a more ideal home than Mr. Sneathen's. The buildings, orchards and crops all indicate the dwelling place of a farmer, who understands his profession. Here a view was taken of the buildings, a scene of apple picking in the orchard and a peach tree loaded down with beautiful fruit.

Pressing on to the village of Horton Bay we secured a view of peach trees, bending beneath their burden, belonging to Mrs. Carlstein and the home of A. J. Stroud.

As in our previous trips a constant source of regret was felt that we had to leave so much behind that was as worthy a place in the collection as those we secured and again we urge that all farmers report what they have in the way of pictures or reports of good crops. One thing that impressed us in Hayes was that better care has been given, in the majority of cases, to their orchards than in the other sections of the county visited, but a vast amount of labor is yet to be done before the farmers reap the benefits awaiting them.

APPLES FOR MORGAN

Will Be Secured in the Grand Traverse Region

Last week while Fred K. George, advertising manager of the Pere Marquette, was in the city he secured a very fine specimen of Winter Banana apples which he took back to Detroit with him. After arriving there he thought it might be a good idea to present the apple to George W. Perkins of the New York offices, so he carefully packed the apple and sent it by express to Mr. Perkins, and Thursday he received a telegram requesting him to send three barrels just like the same to the latter's New York address for the use of himself and J. Pierpont Morgan.

It is now up to Mr. George to secure the three barrels, the contents of which must be up to the grade of the sample. As the apple sent was a perfect specimen it will keep him busy securing this amount, but it is needless to say that he will find them if he has to travel all over the Grand Traverse region to secure them.

When the order is filled it will be a great advertisement of the fruit industry of this section, as it will acquaint the millionaires of New York with the quality of fruit raised here, and very likely interest them in our fruit lands. At the present time the east is not as well acquainted as it should be with our possibilities and this venture may be the means of bringing great good to this country.

Mr. George thoroughly understands the art of advertising, and will make the most of this opportunity to place some of our choicest fruit on the tables of the magnates of the nation.—Traverse City Eagle.

GOOD NEWS

Many Charlevoix Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Charlevoix are glad to know that prompt relief is within their reach. Many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands upon thousands of people are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

T. J. Uhler, 820 S. Union St. Traverse City, Mich., says: "Two years ago I gave a public testimonial in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills and today I can recommend them just as highly as I did then. For several years I was afflicted with kidney complaint and though I doctored faithfully and took a number of so-called kidney cures, I found but little relief. I had often heard of Doans Kidney Pills and as I had seen them recommended by local people, I decided to give them a trial. I procured a supply and I was astonished at the results of their use. In a few weeks Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me and since them I have been free from kidney trouble. I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past year or so. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case, benefit has been received."

Literary Notes

Why I Left the Ministry.

"As a minister I found that I could not be honest," says a former country pastor in Woman's Home Companion for October. "I could not be honest in business matters. I could not be honest morally. I could not be honest socially. Repeatedly the attempt ended in disaster." After a long and bitter experience, he came to the conclusion that the small church owes four duties to its pastor. They are:

"1 Pay up. Turn in your contribution to the church treasury with the utmost promptness. Leave the treasurer no excuse for running your minister into debt.

"2. Speak out. When the church is about to choose a new pastor, raise the question immediately as to the stamp of preaching expected. Conservative or progressive, let it be settled then. Better a hot debate and the consequent hard feelings than a sham acquiesence that keep things smooth for the time, and later subjects a minister to a process of doctrinal bullying that degrades his manhood. If subsequently there arise disagreements, see to it that they are met not by bringing pressure to bear sporadically upon the pastor, but by bringing pressure to bear, when necessary, upon his parishioners. By this I mean demanding that they reach common ground on which they are willing to stand consistently.

"3. Be considerate. Refuse to ruin your pastor's usefulness by heaping upon him a host of unnecessary tasks. Leave him time to fulfil his larger obligations honestly—time for a full, patient, conscientious preparation for the pulpit, time for the faithful shepherding of the flock.

"4. Be natural. The pose people assume toward a minister is a survival of a bygone time, and so is their insistence that the professional attitude is one of severity of life. The natural, instinctive attitude is that of candor, in the one matter and of respect for his individual convictions in the other.

"Some day, when Christians have come to understand that only as these four simple rules are obeyed can a clergyman maintain his honesty, there will result a reformation that will make the preacher's calling what God means it to be—the noblest, the most inspiring, the most hallowed in all the world. And never again will a man write an account of how he left the ministry to save his soul!"

TEN MILLION DOLLARS

Estimated Value of Michigan's Bean Crop This Year

A dispatch from Saginaw says:

Instead of being a half failure as was predicted only a fortnight ago, following the severe frosts in this part of the state, Michigan's bean crop this year will be one of the greatest and the most valuable on record. As against a yield of only 3,500,000 bushels last year, it will exceed 6,000,000 bushels this year. The acreage last season was approximately 350,000, while this year there were upwards of 440,000 acres of land in the state laden with beans to harvest, or a 25 per cent larger acreage.

This is the estimate placed on Michigan's 1909 crop by Henry W. Carr, head of one of the largest grain commission houses in the state following his trip last week and this week with the manufacturer's and wholesaler's trade extension. The travel took Carr through hundreds of miles of territory in northern and northwestern Michigan and all through the Thumb district, which is the greatest producer of beans in the state. With beans selling at from $1.75 to $1.90 a bushel and a yield of 6,000,000 bushels the value of this crop to the Michigan farmers may be appreciated.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

CHAPTER V.
THE ENGLISH INVADE.

The granddaughter of Jack Wyckholme, attested by two maids, her husband and his valet, a clerk from the chambers of Duxworth, Newnes & Grapewin, a fat cocker, seventeen trunks and a cartload of late novels, which she had been too busy to read at home, was the first of the bewildered legatees to set foot upon the island of Japat.

She was very pretty, very smart and delightfully arrogant after a manner of her own.

Mr. Saunders was the polite but excessively middle class clerk who went out to keep the legal strings untangled for them. He was soon to discover that his duties were even more comprehensive.

It was he who saw to it that the luggage was transferred to the lighter which came out to the steamer when she dropped anchor off the town of Aratat; it was he who counted the pieces and haggled with the boatmen; it was he who carried off the hand luggage when the native dock boys refused to engage in the work; it was he who ruthlessly dropped a suit case upon the hollowed tail of the red cocker, an accident which ever afterward gave him a tenacity of grip that no man could understand.

If Lady Deppingham expected a royal welcome from the inhabitants of Japat she was soon to discover her error. Not only was the pictured scene of welcome missing on the afternoon of her arrival, but an overpowering air of antipathy smote her in the face as she stepped from the lighter, conquest in her smile of conciliation. She glanced from right to left down the lines of swarthy islanders and saw nothing in their faces but surly, bitter unfriendliness. They stood stolidly, stonily at a distance, white robed lines of resentment personified.

Not a hand was lifted in assistance to the bewildered visitors; not a word, not a smile of encouragement escaped the lips of the silent throng.

"Is there no British agent here?" she demanded imperatively, perhaps a little more shrilly than usual.

No one deigned to answer. Glances of indifference, even scorn, passed among the silent lookers-on, but that was all.

"Does no one here understand the English language?" she demanded. "I don't mean you, Mr. Saunders," she added sharply as the little clerk set the suit case down abruptly and stepped forward, again fumbling his much fumbled straw hat. This was the moment when the red cocker's tail came to grief. The dog arose with an astonished yelp and fled to his mistress. He had never been so outrageously set upon before in all his pampered life. Seizing the opportunity to vent her feelings upon one who could understand, even as she poured soothings upon the insulted Pong, whom she clasped in her arms, Lady Agnes transformed the unlucky Saunders into a target for a most ably directed volley of wrath.

Lord Deppingham, a slow and cumbersome young man, stood by nervously fingering his eyeglass. For the first time he felt that the clerk was better than a confounded dog after all.

"My dear," he said, waving Saunders into the background, "I think it was an accident. The dog had no business going to sleep"— He paused and inserted his monocle for the purpose of looking up the precise spot where the accident had occurred.

"Oh, rubbish!" exclaimed her ladyship. "I suppose you expect the poor darling to apologize."

"All this has nothing to do with the case. We're more interested in learning where we are and where we are to go. Permit me to have a look about."

His wife stared after him in amazement as he walked over to the canvas awning in front of the low dock building, actually elbowing his way through a group of natives. Presently he came back, twisting his left mustache.

"The fellow in there says that the English agent is employed in the bank. It's straight up this street. By Jove! He called it a street, don't you know," he exclaimed, disdainfully eying the narrow, dusty passage ahead.

"There's the British flag, my lord, just ahead. See the building to the right, sir?" said Mr. Saunders, more respectfully than ever and with real gratitude in his heart.

"So it is! That's where he is. I wonder why he isn't down here to meet us?"

"Very likely he didn't know we were coming," said his wife icily.

"Well, we'll look him up. Come along, everybody. Oh, I say, we can't leave this luggage unguarded. They say these fellows are the worst robbers east of London."

It was finally decided, after a rather

"Do you mean to say we are to walk?"

"Yes, my lord, if you expect to go there."

"Of course we expect to go there. Are there no horses on the beastly island?"

"Hundreds, my lord, but they belong to the people, and no one but their owners ride them. The servants at the chateau turned Mr. Skaggs' horses out to pasture before they left."

"The servants, my lord."

Lady Deppingham's eyes grew wide with understanding. "You don't mean to say that the servants have left the place?" she cried.

"Yes, my lady. They were natives, you know."

"What's that got to do with it?" demanded Deppingham.

"I'm afraid you don't understand the situation," said Mr. Bowles pathetically. "You see, it's really a triangular controversy. If I may be so bold as to say so. Lady Deppingham is one of the angles; Mr. Browne, the American gentleman, is another; the native population is the last. Each wants to be the hypotenuse. While the interests of all three are merged in the real estate, there is nevertheless a decided disposition all around to make it an entirely one sided affair."

"I don't believe I grasp," muttered Deppingham blankly.

"I see perfectly," exclaimed his wife. "The natives are allied against us, just as we are, in a way, against them and Mr. Browne. Really, it seems quite natural, doesn't it, dear?" turning to her husband.

"Very likely, but very unfortunate. It leaves us to broil our brains out down here on this pier. I say, Mr.—er—old chap, can't you possibly arrange some sort of transportation for us? Really, you know, we can't stand here all day."

"Most of the islanders have got three or four wives already."

"I've no doubt I can arrange it, my lord. If you will just wait here until I run back to the bank I dare say I'll find a way. Perhaps you'd prefer standing under the awning until I return."

It was fully half an hour before he was seen coming down the street, followed by a score or more of natives, their dirty white robes flapping about their brown legs. At first they could not believe it was Bowles. Lord Deppingham had a sharp thrill of joy, but it was short-lived. Bowles had changed at least a portion of his garb. He now wore the tight red jacket of the British trooper, while an ancient army cap was strapped jauntily over his ear.

"It's all right, my lord," he said, saluting as he came up. "They will do anything I tell 'em to do when I represent the British army. This is the only uniform on the island, but they've been taught that there are more where this one came from. These fellows will carry your boxes up to the chateau, sixpence to the man, if you please, sir, and I've sent for two carts to draw your party up the slope. They'll be here in a jiffy, my lady." Then, turning majestically to the huddled natives, he waved his slender stick and said: "Lively now! No loafing! Lively!"

Whereupon the entire collection of boxes, bags and bundles figuratively picked itself up and walked off in the direction of the chateau.

Bowles wore the tight red jacket of a British trooper.

cold chill shoot up his spine, but he refused to encourage the maid's fears by turning around.

"Your lordship," said Mr. Saunders three minutes later, "this is Mr. Bowles, his majesty's agent here. He is come with me to"—

It was then and not until then that his lordship turned his stare from the sea to the clerk and his companion.

"Aw," he interrupted, "glad to see you, I'm sure. Would you be good enough to tell us how we are to reach the—er—chateau and why the devil we can't get anybody to move our luggage?"

Mr. Bowles, who had lived in Japat for sixteen years, was a tortuously slow Englishman, with the curse of the clime still growing upon him. He was half asleep quite a good bit of the time and wholly asleep during the remainder.

"Everything is transferred by hand, my lord, and the chateau is two miles farther up the side of the mountain. It's quite a walk, sir."

CHAPTER VI.
THE CHATEAU.

The road to the chateau took its devious way through the little town out into the green foothill beyond. Two lumbering wooden wheeled carts, none too clean each drawn by four perspiring men, served as conveyances by which the arrivals were to make the journey to their new home.

Lady Deppingham's pert little nose lifted itself in disgust as she was jogged through the town behind the grunting substitutes for horseflesh. She sat beside her husband in the foremost cart. Mr. Bowles, very tired, but quite resplendent, walked dutifully beside one wheel; Mr. Saunders took his post at the other. The servants came along behind in the second cart. Far ahead, like hounds in full cry, toiled the unwilling luggage bearers. From the windows and doorways of every house, from the bazaars and cafes, from the side streets and mosque approaches, the gaze of the sullen populace fastened itself upon the little procession. The town seemed ominously silent.

At last they came to the end of the squalid street and plunged into the

THEATRICAL

The Girl From the U. S. A.

"The Girl from the U. S. A.," which appears at the Charlevoix Theatre on Thursday, Sept. 30, is said to be a literary invention. It makes everybody sit up and take notice. Though showing in its evolutions the social life of the orient, in its most striking phases, it is so vivelly American in sentiment, so vigorously clever in dialogue, and astonishingly true as to types and characters, that no one ever thinks that any of its exciting complications are other than the natural events of a real life portrayed so strikingly. Of course it is a love story. A story of hate also—with its twin, Revenge; of unlawful desire and lawful triumph. And it shows in vivid gleams the complicated politics of other lands, and the close relationship of our own Government with the one Free Press on earth, whose mighty voice controls the world, and decides the fates of individuals and nations.

The Majestic as usual, has a good bill for the latter part of this week, headed by Bert Brunning, the crook in pink; Adams and Sheldon, the girls of color, in a comic sketch, and Mr. and Mrs. Brown and their dogs, besides the moving pictures, which are changed every night, and the illustrated songs will maintain the popularity of this place of amusement.

GIVES WARNING

Address by James J. Hill at Bankers' Convention

On National Wealth and the Farm—Production Must Increase

"The idea that we feed the world is being corrected; and unless we can increase the agricultural population and their product, the question of a source of food supply at home will supersede the question of a market for our own products abroad." This was the warning given by James J. Hill at the convention of the American Bankers' association during a discussion of the decline of agriculture and its consequences. Mr. Hill's subject was "National Wealth and the Farm."

"We have," said the speaker, "almost reached a point where, owing to increased population without increased production per acre, our home food supply will be insufficient for our own needs; within fifteen years, possibly less, we are likely to become a wheat importing nation; the percentage of the population engaged in agriculture and the wheat product per acre are both falling; at the same time the cost of living raised everywhere by this relative scarcity of bread, by artificial increase in the price of all manufactured articles, and by a habit of extravagance which has enlarged the view of both rich and poor of what are to be considered the necessaries of life.

"These plain facts should disturb and arouse not only the economic student, but the man who is most intimately related to the wealth of the nation and most concerned that it shall not suffer in its decreases."

Mr. Hill declared that never yet has enchanced cost, when due to agricultural decline and inability to supply national needs, failed to end in national disaster.

"I refer not merely to the quality and results of our tillage, but to the setting of the human tide away from the cultivated field and toward the factory gate or the city slum," he said. "This is something whose consequences for evil are as certain as if the aggregate deposits in all the banks of this country were decreasing by a fixed percentage every ten years, while their loans were increasing by another percentage just as certain. You would know what to do in the light that assured bye and bye."

"Fighting."

We may think sometimes that the evil of strong drink is distinctively modern. But, alas, no! When I came to a study of its age, I found that as long ago as 4,000 years the Chinese Emperor had beheaded a man for manufacturing a stimulating drink from barley, and had issued an imperial edict which has been respected from that day to this, that none should ever again be brewed. I found, also, that the ancient Egyptians had a form of prohibitory law; that the Romans kept all intoxicants from all under 30 years of age, at the instigation of the instigation of Cato; and that the Greeks doubled a criminal's penalty if he was found drunk in the commission of his crime.

And so, through the history of every civilization, I traced the legislative efforts of governments to stem the tide of sin and misery which the strange curse of stimulants has always left in its wake. I found that noble Greece and mighty Rome crumbled to dust because of it. I found that through all the mediaeval ages the progress of religion and knowledge was dammed up because of it, and the prevalence of ignorance and crime and disease immeasurably helped by it.

Sickened by my discovery of the formidable part that liquor has played in ancient history, I at last turned my attention to the country of my heart—the dear United States which we as young men love with all the strength of our manhood, and to which you as young women give the noblest allegiance of a noblest womanhood. I came upon that wise and courageous patriot, Dr. Benjamin Rush, signer of the immortal Declaration, and Surgeon-General of the Revolution, who gave America the first scientific temperance impetus—in his pamphlet "An Enquiry into the Effect of Alcohol Upon the Human Mind and the Human Body." Here was the first chemical analysis of alcohol as poison, and the first exposition of the truths now taught in every public school in the United States, and in every Loyal Temperance Legion—that alcohol destroys brain, muscle, organs and tissue, and attacks the integrity of the mind and soul itself.

But then followed a period of strong temperance sentiment which swayed the whole country. Men like Lyman Beecher, Henry Ward Beecher, Wm. Lloyd Garrison and even Abraham Lincoln made many addresses to stem the tide of intemperance which was ruining so many men—such as Daniel Webster, Edgar Allen Poe and George Prentiss. But in the midst of this campaign against rum, during which the saloonkeeper was a generally despised and low class individual, the guns of the Civil War began to boom, and the country was quickly in the turmoil of a mighty upheaval. Soon the government was in need of revenue and declared that it must tax something to get money.

Then the liquor traffic saw a chance to get a seeming legal protection, and it advocated a tax, though it organized itself thoroughly to make sure of keeping that tax low enough to force the small dealer out of business, and make money for the whiskey capitalists.

But Frances Willard, with her far-seeing eye and prophetic soul, saw clearly into the dim, veiled future, and on a great occasion she said with a voice of truth indisputable, "in order to stop drunkenness we must teach men before they become drunkards! We must plant in the minds of the young such knowledge of the harm of the drink traffic that when they grow to manhood and womanhood they shall be doubly armed against the foe. For years we have tried to reform the drunkard, and meanwhile have neglected the door through which the saloon has been enticing an hundred thousand young people each year to take the place of the drunkards who have fallen into their graves!"

And here was the birth of the Loyal Temperance Legion and here it is today over half a million strong, girding the world from Iceland to Africa—a mighty, potent force against the rum traffic of the future! Into it not only Frances Willard poured her best thought and her noblest ideas, but many another heart yearning for the welfare of the future has also given up life and comfort that it might live and prosper.

What ideals we have to guide us! What magnificent examples, what object lessons of sacrifice and devotion to truth and right and purity there are to inspire us! And what a glorious motto is ours, "Lifting Others as We Climb!". Is there in all the realm of literature another sentence so fraught with inspiration, another thought so all-encompassing in its idealism as this, our Alumni motto? To me it represents the very essence of our Christianity. It urges us to climb first, that we may see the heights of character, that we may follow our Christ and his shining standard; and then it bids us look back and hold out a hand to our stumbling brother, that we may climb together, encouraging and assisting each other on the upward path.

Hardest of all is the struggle to bring ourselves to the Legion's high mark of character—to put out the false and the low and the insincere in our natures and develop that which will beautify our character and make us pure and true and strong. Just as the law of struggle prevails in the physical world, so does it prevail in the moral world. Ever, ever must we keep ourselves ready to battle with temptation and incipient wrong. It must have been what Christ meant when he said "I come not to bring peace but a sword," for Christ was the most peace-loving of men. If I were naming this address, therefore, I would call it "Fighting," for this is what we need more than all else in the world. Not the clash of swords and the roar of guns and the shedding of blood, but the persistent consistent opposition to every form of evil, and the steady struggle to master self. There are Gettysburgs and Waterloos in every life, and there is no battle so mighty as the silent struggle that wages within the heart and the head.

Let us fight, therefore, fight with the insidious temptations of every-day life, fight with the wrongs that threaten to undermine the social life of our time, and fight with the up-rising evil in our own natures. It is through struggle that we grow stronger to conquer greater things, and through yielding that we grow weaker to resist the smaller temptations.

And let us fight together! let us fight with united purpose and united effort, gathering from each other courage and enthusiasm as we pass from victory to victory. But like soldiers in this silent struggle let each one of us not despise a small task, and deem no part little in our general battle. If each legioner will but do his little part faithfully—be it but the securing of one new graduate or a part in a public meeting—mark me, it will count into a mighty array against the enemy which is even now regarding our spreading ranks and enthusiastic assemblies with a quaking and a foreboding of doom. To the work, then, legioners, for behind the dark curtain which obscures that wondrous future, is stored up for us, in the name of God, a victory that will endure forever!

To Whom it May Concern.

Mt. Pleasant Indian School,
Mt. Pleasant, Mich., Sept. 14, 1909.

Sometime ago there appeared in the different newspapers throughout this state different published statements upon the early discontinuance of the Mount Pleasant school by Congress. This news reached the ears of the patrons of the school and we find has worked a hardship upon the school. I submitted the facts to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who replied as follows:

"The office has had under consideration, the question set out in your letter of May 12, concerning the detriment to your school of published statements announcing the early closing of the Mt. Pleasant School.

All these are without authority from this office. As you are aware the annual Congressional appropriation was made for the school for the fiscal year 1910, and no reason is known to the office why it should not be carried on as successfully as heretofore. As far as the office is concerned there is no present intention to close it.

It is therefore proper for you to circulate among your Indian patrons by letters, posters or newspaper notices, accurate information on this point."

If you are interested, will you therefore see that this letter is published in your paper.

Thanking you for the courtesy, I am,

Very respectfully,
ROBERT A. COCHRAN,
Superintendent.

shady road that ascended the slope through what seemed to be an absolutely unbroken though gorgeous jungle. The cool green depths looked most alluring to the sun baked travelers They could almost imagine that they heard the dripping of fountains, the gurgling of rivulets, so like paradise was the prospect ahead. Lady Agnes could not restrain her cries of delighted amazement.

"It's like this all over the island, your ladyship," volunteered Mr. Bowles, mopping his brow in a most unmilitary way, "except at the mines and back there in the town."

"Where are the mines?" asked Deppingham.

"The company's biggest mines are seven or eight miles eastward as the crow flies, quite at the other side of the island. It's very rocky over there, and there's no place for a landing from the sea. Everything is brought overland to Ararat and placed in the vaults of the bank. Four times a year the rubies and sapphires are shipped to the brokers in London and Paris and Vienna. It's quite a neat and regular arrangement, sir."

"But I should think the confounded natives would steal everything they got their hands on."

"What would be the use, sir? They couldn't dispose of a single gem on the island, and nothing is taken away from here except in the company's chests. Besides, my lord, these people are not thieves. They may kill people occasionally, but they are quite honest, believe me. And, in any event, are they not a part of the great corporation? They have their share in the workings of the mines and in the profits. Mr Wyckholme and Mr. Skaggs were honest with them, and they have been just as honest in return."

"I should think they'd be terribly tempted," said Lady Agnes. "They look so wretchedly poor."

"My lady," said Bowles, "there are but four poor men on the island—myself and the three Englishmen who operate the bank. There isn't a poor man, woman or child among the natives. This is truly a land of rich men. The superintendent of the mines is a white man—a German—and the three foremen are Boers. They work on shares, just as the natives do, and save even more, I think. The clerical force is of gray native. There were but ten white men here before you came, including two Greeks. Being part owners, the natives have decided that four hours constitute a day's work. They pay themselves accordingly, as it were. No one works after midday, sir."

"I say, wouldn't this be a paradise for the English workingman?" said Deppingham. "That's the kind of day's labor they'd like. Do you mean to say that these fellows trudge eight miles to work every morning and back again at noon?"

"Certainly not, sir. They ride their thoroughbred horses to work and ride them back again."

"You take my breath away," said the other, lapsing into a stunned silence.

The road had become so steep and laborious by this time that Bowles was very glad to forego the pleasure of talking. He fell back with Mr. Saunders and proceeded to give the inquisitive lawyer's clerk all the late news of the island.

The inhabitants of Japal had been prompt to protect themselves in a legal sense. They had engaged the services of eminent solicitors in London, who were to represent them in the final settlement of the estate. London was to be the battleground in the coming conflict. A committee of three had journeyed to England to put the matter in the hands of these lawyers and were now returning to the island with a representative of the firm, who was coming out to stand guard, so to speak. Von Blitz, the German superintendent, was the master mind in the native contingent. The absent committee was composed of Ben Adl, Abdallah Ben Sablat and Rasula, the Ararat lawyer. They were truly wise men from the east—old, shrewd, crafty and begotten of Mohammed.

The mines continued to be operated as usual pending the arrival of the executors' representative, who, as we know, was now on the ground in the person of Thomas Saunders. The fact that he also served as legal adviser to Lady Deppingham was not of sufficient moment to disturb the arrangements on either side.

As for the American heir, Robert Browne, he had not yet arrived. He was coming by steamer from the west, according to report, and was probably on the Indian Ocean, Sumatra to Madagascar, due off Ararat in two or three days.

"The Islanders," said Mr Bowles, lighting a cigarette, "all looks to me, have all the best of the situation. They get the property whether they marry or not, while the original beneficiaries have to marry each other or get off the island at the end of the year. Most of the Islanders have got three or four wives already."

"You mean to say that they can have as many wives as they choose?" demanded Saunders, wrinkling his brow.

"Yes, just so long as they don't choose anybody else's."

"My word!"

"Eh?" queried Bowles, arousing himself.

"I didn't say anything," retorted Saunders, looking up into the treetops

Standing out against the sky fully a mile ahead was the home to which they were going. The chateau, beautiful as a picture, lifted itself like a dream castle above all that was earthly and sordid. It smiled down from its lofty terrace and glistened in the sunset glow like the jewel that had been its godmother.

According to its own records, the chateau, fashioned quite closely after a famous structure in France, was designed and built by La Marche, the ill fated French architect who was lost at sea in the wreck of the Vendome. Three years and more than £700,000—to make it seem more prodigious, nearly 18,000,000 francs—were consumed in its building.

Apartments fit for a king abounded. Suits which took one back to the luxuries of Marie Antoinette were common. Banquet halls, ballrooms, reception halls, a chapel and even a crypt were to be found if one undertook a voyage of discovery.

Lord and Lady Deppingham, being first in the field, at once proceeded to settle themselves in the choicest rooms—a Henry VI. suit, which looked out on the sea and the town as well. It is said that Wyckholme slept there twice, while Skaggs looked in perhaps half a dozen times—when he was lost in the building and trying to find his way back to familiar haunts.

There was not a sign of a servant about the house or grounds. The men whom Bowles had engaged carried the luggage to the rooms which Lady Deppingham selected and then vanished as if into space.

"They say these Americans are a wonderful people, my lord," ventured Mr Bowles. "I dare say when Mr and Mrs. Browne arrive they'll have some way of"—

"Browne!" cried her ladyship. "This very evening I shall give orders concerning the rooms they are to occupy. I suppose, however, that the rooms we have taken are the best?"

"The choicest, my lady," said Bowles, bowing.

"See here, Mr.—er—old chap, don't you think you can induce the servants to come back to us? By Jove, I'll make it worth your while."

"What are we to do?" wailed Lady Agnes, sitting down suddenly upon the edge of a fountain.

"You see, my lady, they take the position that you have no right here," volunteered Bowles. "They've got the ridiculous idea into their noddles that you can't be the heiress unless Lord Deppingham passes away inside of a year, and"—

"I'm — if I do!" roared the perspiring obstacle. "I'm not so obliging as that, let me tell you. If it comes to that, what sort of ass do they think I'd be to come away out here to pass away? London's good enough for any man to die in."

"You are not going to die, Peppy," said his wife consolingly, "unless you starve to death," she supplemented, with an expressive frown.

Meal For Hogs.

The following meal mixture for hog feeding is recommended by a contemporary: Oats, finely ground, 50 per cent; barley, finely ground, 20 per cent; shorts, 20 per cent; oilmeal, 20 per cent.

Poultry Pointers.

A cellar cave is the best place for the incubator if it is operated in hot weather

Even with but a few birds it is worth while to use trap nests and know which ones are paying their board.

Bath water in abundance is as good for ducks as dust bath for hens. Breeding ducks especially should be amply provided.

Encourage the fowls to follow the plow when breaking the sod. They will pick up many worms and bugs that would otherwise injure the crop planted and convert them into eggs.

More careful attention should be given to the dressing, packing and shipping of poultry on the farm than is generally done. Uniformity is one great thing with market poultry, and generally the most salable is the medium sized bird having a plump and shapely body.

Young turkeys are very delicate and must be handled very carefully in order to raise a good percentage of the brood. They are better cared for when away from the older birds than with them, since the older ones are such inveterate wanderers that many of the little ones are lost.

Plenty of exercise is necessary for little chicks, but it is not best to allow them to run in the tall grass before the dew has dried away. They should be kept in the coop until after 8 a. m.; then they can be turned out and allowed to run. If it is not desirable to allow the hen to run, stretch a long wire and tie the hen to a ring, so she can pass from one end of the wire to the other.

Not more than forty hens should be kept in run. Thirty would be much better. The larger the flock is, the sooner they clear off the surface food. During the spring and summer, when fowls have the free range of the farm, there is plenty of room for a large flock, but when fowls are confined in their runs the flocks must be smaller. Unless other conditions are supplied a large flock will eat up the profits.

Des Moines, Ia., is to build a mile of experimental roadway to determine the best method of construction. One section will be of cement, another of clay covered with broken stone, etc.

Neighborhood Notes

Charles Ramsey recently threshed 110 bushels of wheat from a two-acre lot, about two miles northwest of Manton. Great care was taken in the preparation of this ground for the seed. It was summer fallowed, and the result justifies the extra amount of work involved.—Manton Record.

The public domain commission has drawn a line on the northern boundaries of Mason, Lake, Osceola, Clare, Gladwin and Arenac counties and decided that 110,000 acres shall be selected north of that line for the new forest reserve of the state. Not more than 25 per cent of this total acreage can be set aside in any one county, and none of it can be land that might do for agricultural purposes.

Fritz, Maple City; junior vice commander, U. W. Herrington, Solon; chaplain, A. L. Thurston, Kingsley; adjutant, Levi Soule, Traverse City; treasurer, Thomas T. Bates, Traverse City. The receipts of the past year were $808.47.

Development work is going on with a rush in Roscommon county. The Central Michigan Land Company at Badger, is clearing hundreds of acres, using twenty-four cords of stumps per day in its turpentine plant. At Michelson, a new modern saw-mill is just being put in, and as fast as land is cut over it will be got under cultivation; in the northeastern part of the county the Michigan Turpentine company is just getting under way; hundreds of acres are being cleared and farmed around the village of Roscommon, and new gravel roads are being built; at St. Helena a big development company has 2,000 acres under cultivation and plans to have another 1,000 ready for plowing this fall. Roscommon is one of the despised sand counties, which modern methods will make fertile.

The Crowl Lumber Company shut their mill down for the season last Saturday noon. Their cut this year was between five and six million feet of lumber and ten thousand cords of wood. This wood piled in a single rank four feet high would nearly build a fence around four sections of land. Rudolph Hahn, who had the contract for piling the wood, thinks that this is a pretty good stunt. He and Amiel Hahn did the greater part of it alone.

The Company is now busy getting their winter camps in running order and the cutting and skidding of logs for next year's run will soon be the order of the day.

All the men who worked in the mill will be furnished employment in the camps, if they wish to work, besides a great many more.—Harbor Springs Graphic.

More pay and more power over the rural carriers are wanted by the fourth class postmasters, who at their state association voted to recommend to the National Association that this be given. The pay schedule has not been changed in 50 years, it was stated. Officers for the Michigan State League of Postmasters were re-elected as follows: President Fred C. Wheeler, Salem; first vice-president, James Ames, Sterling; second vice-president, A. B. Hyatt, Linden; secretary, F. E. Richards, Clarksville; treasurer, Grace C. Rambo, Yorkville; members of executive committee, E. G. Ely, Davisburg, and W. H. Atkinson, Silverwood. Delegates to the national convention, James Ames, Sterling; C. Bruce Fuqua, Paris; A. Bates, Grayling; A. S. Knapp, Attica, these to select the fifth member of the delegation. The place of holding the next meeting is left to the executive committee.

The Colonial Hotel on Burt Lake, owned by W. F. Brann of Pittsburg, was destroyed by fire on Sunday night of last week. The loss is estimated at $50,000 with no insurance.

The Colonial was known as one of the finest of the resort hotels of the Northern Michigan section. It was located on an island in Burt Lake and was an ideal spot for summer resorting. Owing to its seclusion, however, it has not been a very popular place during the last two or three years and has not attracted the large crowds which were demanded to make the hotel a paying investment.

It is stated that there was no insurance. The property was valued at about $70,000.

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction Sale

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars work of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised; these are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business, and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction [illegible] write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising will do.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

The State Lecturer, in preparing the Bulletin for the last quarter, has outlined topics which are particularly adapted to Charlevoix County.

For October the subject assigned is schools and school legislation. In every grange you have some member who attended the meeting held in Charlevoix Thursday, who can pass on the good things which he learned at that meeting. Search him out and have him do so, then have an animated discussion.

The second meeting is taken up with the beginning of a study of fruit growing which is sure to become the leading industry of our section, and, to the grange alone, must we look for the education on the subject which will enable us to take advantage of our opportunities. For this quarter I appeal to you to try the line of work outlined in the Bulletin and report results to me.

VOL. 27. NUMBER 40 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1909 — PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

FIRST ONE HELD IN THE STATE

Was the Meeting of School Officers In This City

IN COMPLIANCE WITH THE NEW LAW

Representatives From Over Sixty Districts Were Present

Deputy Superintendant of Public Instruction and Commissioner Milford Kept Busy Answering Questions

The school officers' meeting which was held in Charlevoix, was by the way, the first meeting of the kind called since the new law went into effect, and was a very successful affair.

Representatives from over sixty school districts were present and they were there for a purpose.

Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction Keeler was present and from the very beginning of his address was busy answering the questions that the officers asked.

The meeting was called to order at ten o'clock, a. m. in the court room and Mr. Keeler was introduced.

In his morning address, Mr. Keeler took up the laws passed by the last legislature. Mr. Keeler took up each law and discussed its merits and was very particular to explain to the officers just what they should and should not do.

The handling of school moneys and keeping of same in certain banks by certain officers, the giving of contracts to school officers, the handling of library moneys, qualifications of voters, qualifications of office holders, the truancy law, township unit law, the tuition law, these and many others were in their turn taken up and discussed while a line of questions was being fired at the speaker from officers who were anxious to know just what they should do and how they should do it.

The commissioner took a very little time during the morning session, as there was very little time left when Mr. Keeler had answered the questions asked him, and explained to the officers some of the troubles that he has had with the reports and urged school officers to pay attention to some matters pertaining to the comfort of the children such as placing hoods on the stoves, rests for feet that are forced to swing and other similar inconveniences that can be found in many school houses.

One o'clock p. m. found the officers again assembled and Mr. Keeler at work. From that time until 2:45 when he was obliged to leave to catch a train, he was very busy explaining some point of law that was not generally understood or answering some question concerning a point that was not clear to some particular officer.

He made a very able address regarding the selection of teachers, urging officers to be very careful. The teacher's character, her personality, her education, fidelity to the work, love for the children and other things that are in the make up of the really successful teacher were outlined from the idealist's standpoint and while admitting that the officers cannot secure the ideal teacher, they were urged to get the best obtainable. They were urged to see the teachers personally if possible before hiring and to make sure that the teacher understood the conditions and that they knew something of the one who was to have control of their children for the next year.

When Mr. Keeler left the room the commissioner again took the floor and discussed some matters pertaining to Charlevoix county in particular, chief among which was, perhaps, the matter of a text book in grammar.

The schools of the county are sadly in need of a good text in this very important subject and the officers were urged to discuss the matter and to decide whether or not they would be willing to adopt a book that the various superintendents of the county together with the commissioner would recommend.

The meeting was dismissed at 3:00 p. m. to allow the officers to reach home by boat or train. The general opinion of those in attendance was that the meeting was a very profitable one and there is no doubt in the mind of the writer but that it will be very beneficial to the schools of the county.

Mr. Keeler expressed himself as being very much pleased with the attendance and the interest shown by the officers.

Such a meeting as this will be held each year hereafter and not only school officers but patrons as well should attend.

SUCCESSFUL FARMERS

Norwood Township Has Many a Prosperous Farmer

Last week a Courier representative made a flying trip through Norwood and was favorably impressed with the possibilities of farming in that township. Time did not permit him to take many notes by the way and we only mention a few.

William Sutton is a Norwood township farmer who is making a success of farming in northern Michigan. Mr. Sutton is one of the farmers who realizes the value of sheep husbandry and has a good flock of sheep. In addition, Mr. Sutton keeps several good cows and takes good care of his orchard spraying it at the proper season last year, and now he is reaping his reward.

James O'Brien is another farmer who is making a success of his profession. A walk through Mr. O'Brien's cornfield will demonstrate to any one that good corn can be raised in Northern Michigan. Fifty five ears of corn from this field filled a basket. Mr. O'Brien also has a fine apple orchard. His home looks out over as fine a view as there is anywhere on earth.

The farms of C. Wisner and the Shaw farm are evidences of of what Norwood is capable of producing.

While we are not able to mention only these few places that attracted our attention, in a flying trip we passed scores of others which were equal to any we have mentioned.

THE HISTORICAL SOCIETY

First Meeting at Major Green's Friday Night

Interesting Program Laid Out for the Winter, Including Paper on Alaska by Rex Beach

The first meeting of the Historical Society will be held on Friday evening, October 8th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Green. This is more especially a business session and any who desire to become member of the society, will have the opportunity at this time. All are welcome, and those desiring to become members are requested to leave their names with Miss Annie McCartney, secretary, who will present them in due form.

The plan of the winter's work continues along last year's line, covering "Our Country," with special features of general interest to all.

The executive committee have scored a hit, in securing the promise of an article from Rex Beach, on Alaska. Dr. Allan Wilkinson and W. E. Hampton, of the committee, knew Mr. Beach when they were all "kids", and through this fact secured the tentative promise from him, to give a little inside paper on Alaska.

Rex Beach, who lived as a boy on the big farm at Atwood, and used to come to Charlevoix to "see the sights," has developed into one of the great writers of to-day, his novels dealing with Alaskan scenes, having made him deservedly famous. Despite his being extremely busy at all times with new literary work, his love for the old days in Charlevoix, has led him to make the personal sacrifice to please old friends. From reliable sources, it is known that he is paid fifteen cents per word for all his writings, and if he finds time to prepare his paper for the Historical Society, it would be the most valuable document in every sense of word, that has ever been read before the society.

STALEY--COURIER

Popular Charlevoix Young Man Finds Bride in Eveline

About one hundred people gathered at the farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Courier, of Eveline township, Monday, to witness the marriage of their daughter, Minnie, to Wesly Staley, of Charlevoix.

The knot which united their lives in one, was made secure at one o'clock, by Rev. F. Dewey Ehle, the Baptist pastor, using a dignified and beautiful ring ceremony. Mr. Arthur Staley and Miss. Mildred Smith, of Charlevoix, attended the bride and groom. After congratulations the guests all partook of a bountiful dinner prepared by the mother of the bride. The bridal couple were splendidly remembered by their many friends with gifts of linen, glassware and silver all of which are valuable and useful.

They have the best wishes of their host of friends for a happy life together.

The American and Spanish flags were raised in honor of the young couple, who will be at home after October 11 at the home of the bride's parents.

CHARGED WITH RECEIVING BRIBES

Ernest H. Cullen Arrested at Boyne City on Serious Charge.

DEPUTY STATE BUILDING INSPECTOR

Alleged Attempt to Hold Up School Board at Boyne City.

For the Sum of Fifty Dollars—Bound Over to the Circuit Court for Trial in Default of Bail.

Ernest H. Cullen, state iospector of factories and buildings, was arrested at Boyne City this morning charged with receiving bribes. Cullen has been at Boyne City the past week engaged in the duties of his office and it is alleged he notified the school board that their school buildings would be condemned. However, for a consideration, he could arrange matters so he could let them pass. President Harris, of the board, notified the prosecuting attorney, who instructed him to go ahead with negotiations.

He did so, twenty-five dollars being the sum that was talked over between him and Cullen.

An appointment was made between Harris and Cullen last night at which time Cullen agreed to pass the buildings on the payment of fifty dollars, which was agreed to.

This morning the money was drawn from the Boyne City bank, marked, and turned over to Cullen in return for his certificate of inspection. He was at once arrested on a charge of bribery, arraigned, waived examination and was bound over to the circuit court for trial. In default of bail, he was brought to the county jail this afternoon.

Mr. Cullen, whose home is in Midland, is a young man thirty-two years old. He has no statement to make at this time and has sent for his attorney.

No "Booze" to Students.

A law passed at the last session of the legislature, which is no joke for saloonkeepers or the tippling-inclined students—no matter what age—which makes it a breach of the law for a saloonkeeper in Michigan to sell intoxicating drinks to a student. This section reads:

To permit any student in attendance at any public or private institution of learning in this state, or a minor, to play at cards, dice, billiards or any game of chance in any part of any building in which such spiritnous liquors or intoxicating drinks are sold. Or to sell or give to any such student any such liquor, except when prescribed by a regular physician for medicinal purposes

NEARING COMPLETION

The New VanPelt Building on Bridge Street

Like the COURIER Building is First Class in Everything

The new VanPelt building on Bridge street is nearing completion and, now that the front is practically completed, bears out the promise made by Van Pelt that there would not be any finer building in Northern Michigan. Mr. Calloway, who has been laying the front for the Chicago Terra Cotta Company, has done his work well and everybody in Charlevoix knows that the work done by Thomas & Holmes is always first class.

It is Mr. Van Pelt's purpose to make the interior of the building as thorough a piece of work as the outside. The post office fittings and the furnishings of the upper rooms to all be of the very best material to be found, and whoever locates in the new offices will be sure to have offices which will draw patrons.

The COURIER does quite a lot of printing for VanPelt's factory and offices in Chicago and recently turned out an advertising card that reads as follows: "Now reason tells us that emanations from a firm determination to excel in all points in any one thing in which one may be engaged, must be productive of better results than to be self satisfied with what has already been done, simply because you have had no complaints from what you have previously turned out." On mentioning to VanPelt that we were constantly striving to carry out that principle with the COURIER but were hampered by our quarters, he agreed to put up for us a model printing office and immediately got to work and we are now in as tingly arranged an office as there is in the state, and will give our patrons better service than ever.

COUNTY FAIR WAS A SUCCESS

Although the Weather Conditions Were Against It

CREDIT DUE SECRETARY NICHOLAS

Exhibits in all Departments Were Ahead of Previous Years

Ingalls and Staley New Directors Elected—Four Days Fair Next Year—Will be Held Earlier

Notwithstanding the adverse weather conditions, the twenty-fifth annual fair of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society, held at East Jordan last week, was a success in every way. To Secretary Nicholas the credit must be given for making the fair this year, what it was, for had it not been for the systematic and thorough advertising campaign, coupled with the weeks of hard work which he put in, nothing would have prevented a flat failure.

Wednesday, which was as bad a day as could be imagined for a county fair, there were over two thousand people on the grounds and Thursday, which was not much better, over two thousand five hundred, the majority, each day, being people from a distance, who were attracted by outside advertising.

Not only was the fair a success in point of attendance but the exhibits were up to the standard of previous years and, in some cases, were far superior.

The fruit display was something grand. George E. Rowe, one of the world's greatest fruit experts, acted as judge, and his report reads: "Fruit very fine, cannot be beat in any state in the Union".

The display of vegetables and grains was equal to any that could be shown in any part of the state.

The poultry department was well filled and much interest was shown in the specimens shown. George W. Cook of this city was the largest exhibitor.

The showing of fancy work was far superior to the display made in previous years.

Farm machinery was shown by the Malpass Hardware Company of East Jordan, Ward & Ward, of this city, and Joseph Lanway of East Jordan.

A very interesting display was that of school work, this section being filled with interested visitors.

In the Grange contests Marion Center carried off first honors, South Arm second and Peninsula third.

Several East Jordan business men had attractive booths and nothing was lacking in the line of exhibits except of stock which was decidedly off.

The weather made it impossible to carry out the race program until the last day, when, although the track was in terrible condition, four races were pulled off. The special attractions advertised fully met the expectations of the crowd.

At the annual election the following officers were elected President, Robert Price, East Jordan; Treasurer, Martin Ruhling, East Jordan; E. B. Ward, Charlevoix, Martin J. Staley, East Jordan, Elmer Ingalls, Charlevoix. All are re-elections except Staley and Ingalls.

It was decided at a meeting of the officers held Friday to hold a four days fair next year, about the middle of September, date to be fixed at the spring meeting.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Here are some specimens of very common errors:

Admit for confess. To admit is to concede something affirmed. An unaccused offender cannot admit his guilt.

Adopt. "He adopted a disguise." One may adopt a child or an opinion, but a disguise is assumed.

Aggravate for irritate. "He aggravated me by his insolence." To aggravate is to augment the disagreeableness of something already disagreeable or the badness of something bad. But a person cannot be aggravated, even if disagreeable or bad.

All of. "He gave all of his property." The words are contradictory. An entire thing cannot be of itself. Omit the preposition.

At for by. "She was shocked at his conduct." This very common solecism is without excuse.—Cosmopolitan.

GOOD ROADS BUILDING.

Plans For Better Highways, to Be Discussed In First Structure of Its Kind.

The Washington state good roads building on the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition grounds, facing Nome circle, is the first building of its kind to be erected in America. Here is shown a well equipped laboratory, where road materials may be tested for determining their value. In another room is shown a model in miniature of one of the four quarries which the state is now putting in operation for supplying crushed rock for road building. This plant is now being installed on Fidalgo island, near Deception pass, in Puget sound. The total appropriation made by the last legislature for improving the roads of the state was $1,300,000.

The good roads building has an auditorium capable of seating 300, which is complete in all appointments, being provided with stereopticon for illustrated lectures. Beginning at 3 p. m. each day a series of beautiful pictures will be shown of scenes in the state of Washington. At 4 p. m. each day an illustrated talk on roads is given, touching methods of construction, maintenance, repairs, dust prevention, etc., as practiced in the United States and other countries.

Here the first American congress of road builders convened on July 5 to 8, inclusive, when delegates from every state in the Union were present as well as from Canada and England.

The good roads building has been placed on a permanent concrete foundation and will be used by the University of Washington as the future home of the department of highway engineering.

COMPACT OF THE WRIGHTS.

Aeroplanists Won't Risk Both Lives at Same Time by Flying Together.

The Wright brothers, the famous aeroplanists, never make a flight together and never will, according to a compact they have made, says a Washington dispatch. Thus if one should be killed there still remains the other to carry on the work.

The question came up the other day as to who should accompany either of them in the Fort Myer flights, for under their contract the aeroplane must carry two persons before it will be accepted. When asked why he would not take his brother Orville Wright said: "We will never fly together. It would not be wise for the both of us to sail in the same machine."

The death of Lieutenant Selfridge is said to have caused the compact.

CHAPTER VII.

THE BROWNES ARRIVE.

CONTRARY to all expectations, the Brownes arrived the next morning. The Deppinghams and their miserably frightened servants were scarcely out of bed when Saunders came in with the news that a steamer was standing off the shallow harbor. Bowles had telephoned up that the American claimant was on board.

The deepest gloom pervaded the household when Lady Deppingham discovered that not one of their retinue knew how to make coffee or broil bacon—not that she cared for bacon, but that his lordship always asked for it when they did not have it.

Bromley upset the last jeg of endurance by hoping that the Americans were bringing a cook and a housemaid with them.

"The Americans always travel like lords," she concluded, forgetting that she served a lord and not in the least intending to be ironical.

"That will do, Bromley," said her mistress sharply. "If they're like most Americans I've seen they'll have nothing but wet nurses and chauffeurs. I can't eat this vile stuff. Come on, Deppy. Let's go up and watch the approach of the enemy."

Scarcely half an hour passed before the advance guard of the Browne company came into view at the park gates below. Deppingham recalled the fact that an hour and a half had been consumed in the accomplishment yesterday. He was keeping a sharp lookout for the magic red jacket and the Tommy Atkins lid. Quite secure from observation, he and his wife watched the forerunners with the band bags; then came the sweating trunk bearers and then crated objects in—what? Yes, by the Lord Harry, in the very carts that had been their private chariots the day before!

Deppingham's wrath did not really explode until the two were gazing open mouthed upon Robert Browne and his wife and his maidservants and his ass, for that was the name which his lordship subsequently applied, with no moderation, to the unfortunate gentleman who served as Mr. Browne's attorney. The Americans were being swiftly, cozily carried to their new home in litters of oriental comfort and elegance, fanned vigorously from both sides by eager boys. First came the Brownes, eager faced, bright eyed, alert young people, far better looking than their new enemies could conscientiously admit under the circumstances; then the lawyer from the States; then a pert young lady in a pink shirt waist and a sailor hat; then two giggling, utterly un-English maids, and all of them lolling in luxurious ease. The red jacket was conspicuously absent.

It is not to be wondered at that his lordship looked at his wife, gulped in sympathy and then said something memorable.

Almost before they could realize what had happened the newcomers were chattering in the spacious halls below, tramping about the rooms and giving orders in high, though apparently efficacious voices. Close at their heels trooped the servants, all of whom took part in the discussion incident to fresh discoveries. At last they came upon the great balcony, pausing just outside the French windows to exclaim anew in their delight.

"Great!" said the lawyer man after a full minute. "Finest I've ever seen. Isn't it a picture, Browne?"

"Glorious!" said young Mr. Browne, taking a long breath. The Deppinghams, sitting unobserved, saw that he was a tall, good looking fellow. They were unconscionably amused when he suddenly reached out and took his wife's hand in his big fingers. She was very trim and cool looking in her white duck.

"What does Baedeker say about it, Bobby?" asked Mrs. Browne. Her voice was very soft and full—the quiet, well modulated Boston voice and manner.

The pert girl in the pink waist opened a small portfolio, while the others gathered around her. She read therefrom. The lawyer drew a compass—from his pocket and pointed vaguely into what proved to be the southwest.

"We must tell Lady Deppingham not to take the rooms at this end," was the next thing that the listeners heard from Mrs. Browne's lips. Her ladyship turned upon her husband with a triumphant sniff.

"What did I tell you," she whispered. "I knew they'd want the best of everything. Isn't it lucky I pounced upon these rooms? They shan't turn us out. You won't let 'em, will you, Deppy?"

"The impudence of 'em!" was all that Deppy could sputter.

At that moment the American party caught sight of the pair in the corner. For a brief space of time the two parties stared at each other, very much as the hunter and the hunted look when they come face to face without previous warning. Then a friendly, half abashed smile lighted Browne's face.

"I beg your pardon," said Browne. "This is Lord Deppingham?"

"Ya-as," drawled Deppy, with a look which was meant to convey the impression that he did not know who the deuce he was addressing.

"Permit me to introduce myself. I am Robert Browne."

"Oh," said Deppy, as if that did not convey anything to him. Then, as an afterthought, "Glad to know you, I'm sure." Still he did not rise, nor did he extend his hand. For a moment young Browne waited, a dull red growing in his temples.

"Don't you intend to present me to Lady Deppingham?" he demanded bluntly without taking his eyes from Deppy's face.

"Uh—er—is that neces"—

"Lady Deppingham," interrupted Browne, "I am Robert Browne, the man you are expected to marry. We are here for the same purpose, I suspect. We can't be married to each other. That's out of the question. But we can live together as if we"—

"Good Lord!" roared Deppy, coming to his feet in a towering rage. Browne smiled apologetically and lifted his hand.

—"as if we were serving out the prescribed period of courtship set down in the will. Believe me, I am very happily married, as I hope you are. The courtship, you will perceive, is neither here nor there. Our every issue is identical, Lady Deppingham. Doesn't it strike you that we will be very foolish if we stand alone and against each other?"

"My solicitor"— began Lady Deppingham and then stopped. She was smiling in spite of herself.

"Your solicitor and mine can get together and talk it over," said Browne blandly. "We'll leave it to them. I am quite ready to be a friendly ally, not a foe."

"Let me understand you," began Deppingham, cooling off suddenly. "Do you mean to say that you are not going to fight us in this matter?"

"Not at all, your lordship," said Browne coolly. "I am here to fight Taswell Skaggs and John Wyckholme deceased. I think both of us will run no risk if we smash the will. If we don't smash it the Islanders will cheerfully take the legacy off our hands."

"By Jove!" muttered Deppy, looking at his wife.

"Thank you, Mr. Browne, for being so frank with us," she said coolly. "If you don't mind, I will consult my solicitor." She bowed ever so slightly, indicating that the interview was at an end and, moreover, that it had not been of her choosing.

"Any time, your ladyship," said Browne, also bowing. "I think Mrs. Browne wants to speak to you about the rooms."

"We are quite settled, Mr. Browne, and very well satisfied," she said pointedly, turning red with a fresh touch of anger.

"I trust you have not taken the rooms at this end."

"We have. We are occupying them."

"I'm sorry," said Browne. "We were warned not to take them. They are said to be unbearable when the hot winds come in October."

"What's that?" demanded Deppingham.

"The look of instructions and description which we have secured sets all that out," said the other. "It's strange that the servants didn't warn you."

"The—the confounded servants left us yesterday before we came, every mother's son of 'em. There isn't a servant on the place."

"What? You don't mean it? I say, Britt, come here a moment, will you? Lord Deppingham says the servants have struck."

The American lawyer, a chubby, red faced man of forty, with clear gray eyes and a stubby mustache, whistled soulfully.

"I'll see what I can do, Mr. Browne. Got to have cooks, eh, Lord Deppingham?" Without waiting for an answer he dashed off. The native carriers were leaving the grounds when Britt's shrill whistle brought them to a standstill. The lawyer waved a triumphant hand to his friends and then climbed into one of the litters to be borne off in the direction of the town.

"He'll have the servants back at work before 2 o'clock," said Browne calmly. Deppingham was transfixed with astonishment.

"How—how the devil do you—does he bring 'em to time like that?" he murmured. He afterward said that if he had had Saunders there at that humiliating moment he would have kicked him.

"They're afraid of the American battleship," said Browne.

"But where is the American battleship?" demanded Deppingham, looking wildly to sea.

"They understand that there will be one here in a day or two if we need it," said Browne, with a sly grin. "That's the bluff we've worked." He looked around for his wife and, finding that she had gone inside, politely waved his hand to the Englishman and followed.

At 3 o'clock Britt returned with the recalcitrant servants—or at least the "pick" of them, as he termed the score he had chosen from the hundred or more. He seemed to have an Aladdin-like effect over the horde.

"Good Lord!" roared Deppy in a towering rage.

Calmly taking Lord Deppingham and his following into his confidence, he said, in reply to their indignant remonstrances, later on in the day:

"I know that an American man-o'-war hasn't any right to fire upon British possessions, but you just keep quiet and let well enough alone. They just simply know that I can send wireless messages and that a cruiser would be out there tomorrow if necessary, pegging away at these green hills with cannon balls so big that there wouldn't be anything left but the horizon in an hour or two. You let me do the talking. I've got 'em bluffed, and I'll keep 'em that way."

Over in the gorgeous west wing Lord Deppingham later on tried to convince his sulky little wife that the Americans were an amazing lot, after all. Bromley tapped at the door.

"Tea is served in the hanging garden, my lady," she announced. Her mistress looked up in surprise, red eyed and a bit disheveled.

"Ask some one to bring the tea things in here, Bromley," she said sternly. "Besides, I want to give some orders. We must have system here, no Americanisms."

The tea things did not come in. In their stead came pretty Mrs. Browne.

"Won't you please join Mr. Browne and me in that dear little garden? It's so cool up there, and it must be dreadfully warm here. Really, you should move at once into Mr. Wyckholme's old apartments, across the court from ours. They are splendid. But now do come and have tea with us."

CHAPTER VIII.

THE MAN FROM BRODNEY'S.

IT was quite forty-eight hours before the Deppinghams surrendered to the Brownes. They were obliged to humbly admit in the seclusion of their own councils that it was to the obnoxious but energetic Britt that they owed their present and ever growing comfort.

Late in the afternoon of the day following the advent of the Brownes, Lord and Lady Deppingham were laboriously fanning themselves in the midst of their stifling Marie Antoinette elegance.

"By Jove, Aggy, it's too beastly hot here for words," growled he for the hundredth time. "I think we'd better move into your grandfather's rooms."

"Now, Deppy, don't let the Brownes talk you into everything they suggest," she complained, determined to be stubborn to the end. "They know entirely too much."

"That's all very good, my dear, but you know quite as well as I that we made a frightful mistake in choosing these rooms. It is cooler on that side of the house. I'm not too proud to be comfortable, don't you know."

The next day they moved into the west wing, and that evening they had the Brownes to dine with them in the banquet hall. Deppingham awoke in the middle of the night with violent cramps in his stomach.

"Don't say a word to Lady Deppingham," he grunted, sitting up in bed and gazing wildly at his valet, "but I've been poisoned. The — — servants—ouch!—don't you know! Might have known. Silly ass! See what I mean? Get something for me—quick!"

For two hours Antoine applied hot water bags and soothing syrups, and his master, far from dying as he continually prophesied, dropped off into a peaceful sleep.

The next morning Deppingham, fully convinced that the native servants had tried to poison him, unconditionally discharged the entire force.

Of course there was a great upheaval. Lady Agnes came tearing down to the servants' hall, followed directly by the Brownes and Mr. Britt.

"Stop!" she cried. "Deppy, what are you doing? Discharging them after we've had such a time getting

ONE WEAK SPOT

Most Charlevoix People Have a Weak Part and Too Often It's the Back

Everyone has a weak spot.
Too often it's a bad back.
Twinges follow every sudden twist.
Dull aching keeps up, day and night.
Tells you the kidneys need help—
For backache is really kidney ache.
A kidney cure is what you need.
Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys.
Cure backache and urinary ills.
Good proof in the following statement.

Mrs. Joseph Bourrie, 300 Division St., Cheboygan, Mich says: "I have no hesitation in recommending Doan's Kidney Pills for they have been of great benefit to me. My back ached severely and there were dull pains through my kidneys that caused me much suffering. Headaches and dizzy spells were common and I felt miserable in every way. Doan's Kidney Pills not only removed the aches and pains, but also regulated the passages of the kidney secretions and helped me in every way. Other members of my family have taken this remedy and in each it has brought marked benefit."

WASTED REGRETS

Loss of Forests Will Be Western Michigan's Greatest Blessing.

HOMESEEKERS COMING TO REALIZE GREAT OPPORTUNITIES TO BE FOUND HERE.

A great deal of false sentiment has been expressed in regard to the stripping of the forests from the lower peninsula of Michigan.

The idea is current that valuable lands have been rendered worthless by the process of converting trees into lumber.

This is all nonsense, and one of the duties of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, organized to develop the agriculture and manufactures of thirteen west shore counties, is to dispel this false notion.

The land yields but one crop of timber. It could never be put to any other use until the timber had been removed. Once fitted for agriculture and the land contributes more from its first crop to the general prosperity of Western Michigan that did all of the timber that stood on it.

The timber paid low wages to a comparatively small force of men engaged in converting it into lumber. This lumber sold in other states and the money received for it, except the small proportion paid here for wages, was banked in Chicago. When drawn out of bank it was used to buy timber land in the far west. It was lost to Michigan.

When the land is cultivated it furnishes a living for the man who works it. It furnishes business for the local stores, the implement dealers, and the produce shippers, and it creates traffic for railroads and steamer lines.

It is not too much to say that every year it creates as much wealth, acre by acre, for the home locality, as did the lamented crop of trees which the lumbermen skinned off.

Let us have an end then of foolish sentimentality over the loss of the forest. A farm is worth as much more to the community as a good milch cow is worth more than a red deer.

The thing to do now is to inform the world of the fact that Western Michigan has cheap land for settlers. The tide of immigration, lullingwood by the song of the western railroad and land agent and hopes of easy wealth on bonanza wheat farms, has swept westward.

Land is Becoming Scarce.

For a number of years it has been apparent that a time was approaching when there would be no more cheap land for homesteading or preemption. That time is now at hand.

Land seekers have overflowed onto the prairies of Manitoba, Assiniboia, and Saskatchewan, reaching northward toward the Arctic circle.

In the mountain districts irrigation projects involving hundreds of millions of dollars have been undertaken.

Is any better proof of the coming land famine needed that these attempts to irrigate desert valleys? Do they not mean the end of cheap land, for irrigated land is never cheap, you know?

The pine stump has been too long a terror to intending settlers. Now the pine stump has a cash value that will steadily increase. Its value for turpentine, wood pulp and other products makes it an asset.

We have seen this stump land of Western Michigan rise in four years from a value of a few cents an acre to an average value of $10. That is only a start. Five years more will more than double its present price which will mean the creation of a greater value than the timber ever possessed.

The first settlers on the prairies were claim jumpers who remained long enough to prove up their titles and then sold out to move on to new districts. The men who followed them brought capital, industry, and a determination to create lasting homes. It took a number of years for the enduring type of citizenship to get rooted.

Good Settlers Coming.

Western Michigan will not have to pass through this tedious operation. The men who buy land for farming now are men who want to locate permanently.

We are just starting in Western Michigan to found a great industrial commonwealth that will be certain to thrive and be prosperous because it has as a basis a wonderful lake shore climate and a wonderfully productive soil closely coupled with the greatest market in the world.

Chicago, the industrial center of our continent lies but a few hours distant from Western Michigan farms, ready to take all that is produced. Lines of transportation already exist, both by rail and by steamship.

An Ideal Land.

The settler coming among us now to found a home finds that he is in no alien distant land. He finds here an intelligent, well established citizenship, with every facility for a happy, prosperous living. He finds good roads, plenty of schools, thriving towns and cities, and the finest climate between the Rockies and the Alleghenies.

Ours is a pleasant land through which flow beautiful streams. We have no floods, no floods, practically no droughts. Our winters are mild and our summers are like paradise.

The time then is ripe for the Western Michigan Development Bureau, embracing the counties of Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Mason, Lake, Manistee, Wexford, Benzie, Leelanau, Grand Traverse, Antrim and Charlevoix, to engage actively in exploiting the resources of this district that we may increase our population, put all of our land under cultivation, and furnish homes for thousands of people who want to work and prosper.

ROOT OF ALL GROWTH.

What the Middle West Knows About the "Dry" Process.

"Dry farming" is a misnamed science. It is a recent discovery and is being taught to the new settlers in the middle west and in Colorado. To those who know nothing of it the idea may be described as farming by conserving natural moisture. The new settlers learned that there were copious rains in the fall, heavy snows in winter and rains in the spring again. If this moisture, which run off into swollen streams with the coming of spring, could be conserved to the growing crops the desert might yet be rejuvenated, and so they set to work.

The great farms were plowed ten and twelve inches deep. They were harrowed fine in the fall, and the rain was allowed to settle in the subsoil. In the spring they were cultivated again, these 10,000 acre farms, and they were left standing to absorb moisture for a year, with constant cultivating to help the moisture retention.

The second fall the seed was put in, and the new rains and snow and thaws brought out the spring wheat thicker and greener than ever. But what of the blistering suns of summer? The new farmer prepared for them by blanketing his land to keep the sun from drying out his subsoil. For this purpose a dust mulch was spread over all the sowed land. The rays of the sun were reflected by it and underneath the moisture nourished the roots of the wheat, though the tops were dry.

The experiment succeeded, and the country had been proved "good for something anyhow."

This mode of scientific conservation of the moisture has been the rod of all growth. Through it alfalfa, with its stout roots diving far down to the subterranean springs, has been made possible. Through it the first sugar beets were grown.

There are, to be sure, vastly separate products, having to do with all their industries. Alfalfa means cattle, and sugar beets mean sugar mills and towns. Alfalfa came first. Then corn came, and then the cattle were introduced next.

Now all through these regions are great ranches where hand fed and fattened cattle are produced—not the gaunt range steers of Texas, but fat cattle, ready for the market and commanding top prices.

"In a battle of tongues between man and wife it is odds that a woman can generally hold her own."

"Yes, I know, but she never does."

INFLAMED EYE TREATMENT.

How to Make and Apply Soothing and Healing Lotions.

The preparation of soothing and healing lotions for the eyes should be known to every housekeeper, for the reason that acute pain often arises from trifling accidents, and to prevent inflammation until professional treatment is secured timely application is necessary. If there is tendency to weakness of sight or to swollen eyelids, the latter sometimes due to a low condition of the system, applications may be beneficial.

Of simple home remedies hot water is one of the best applications that can be used when the eyes are inflamed, whether from crying or from irritation caused by a foreign particle lodged on the eyeball or lid. The water should be as hot as can be endured, and two soft cloths are necessary for the treatment, as one must be wrung out and put over the eyes, while the patient lies down, and as the compress cools the other is immediately laid on. Twenty minutes of this will usually reduce the redness from a prolonged fit of crying.

Camphor water eye wash, of which one hears so much, is easily prepared by putting a grain of borax to an ounce of camphor water. It is safest to filter this or any other mixture containing a powder through brown paper, that no smallest particle shall remain. The lotion may be dropped into the eyes several times a day and at night. In extreme cases of irritability a tiny piece of linen is soaked with the solution and laid directly over the lids, renewing as it dries. If this treatment is continued through the night, as may be done with little trouble, the eyes will be improved in the morning.

Tea makes a better eye lotic than many persons know, for the tannic acid which is extracted from the leaves is an excellent astringent. For this use a strong decoction is brewed with boiling water, and the infusion stands until the liquid is cold. It is then strained and the eyes are freely bathed.

For acute inflammation that often appears when a foreign particle is not quickly removed from the eye an alum mixture is strongly recommended. A grain of the powder is put into an ounce of water, and after the former has dissolved the lotion must be filtered through brown paper. A few drops are put into the eye immediately and at night. Equally soothing is sulphate of zinc and rosewater, a grain of the former to an ounce of the latter. This, too, is dropped in night and morning.

How to Make a Sewing Box.

One of the most convenient articles a roomer can have is a sewing box—not a large affair, but something large enough to hold the numerous little articles needed every week and which really take up too much space in the bureau or trunk. It can be slipped under the bed and will not be unsightly in the room if covered. Get a pretty green and pink striped cretonne and cover the box neatly, tacking the cretonne on the inside of the box. Then line it with green linen, tacking it around the inside of the box with little white headed tacks. On the lid, which should be hinged, have a little pincushion, a place for scissors, tape measure, thread and ruler. The heavy elastic holds them in place. Button boxes, boxes of thread and dress patches can be kept in the box portion.

How to Take Olive Oil Easily.

A young woman who had suffered for years with gastric troubles was advised by her physician to take olive oil three times a day. As the pure olive oil was extremely distasteful she compromised by buttering her bread, shaking the salt and pepper over it and then soaking it in a tablespoonful of pure olive oil. In this way she easily swallowed the required three tablespoonfuls. In a comparatively short time her digestive troubles wholly disappeared, though she had stopped all medicines and treatment save deep breathing, where she used the abdominal muscles steadily and regularly for five minutes at a time. When oil is ordered medicinally it will prove less distasteful if eaten on cress or lettuce. At first a little vinegar may be taken, the amount gradually reduced until the pure oil can be eaten without nausea.

Bokhara Sheep.

The department of agriculture is seriously considering the introduction into this country of Bokhara sheep, from which comes the fur called Persian lamb. All astrakhan fur is now taken on territory tributary to the Caspian sea. The best fur is taken from the lamb when it is only four or five days old. The Bokhara sheep also makes good mutton.

TO PROTECT OREGON CAVES.

President Taft Makes Marble Grottoes a National Monument.

President Taft recently signed a proclamation making a national monument of the Oregon caves or "marble halls" of Josephine county, in southern Oregon. These natural wonders are located in the Siskiyou national forest, about thirty miles south of Grant's pass, in Cave mountain.

The caves are in marble and other limestones and consist of innumerable caverns, corridors and passageways of various sizes, all of them decorated beyond description in crystallized carbonates. They have been explored to a distance of two miles or more, the lowest of them being at a depth of about 2,000 feet below the summit of Cave mountain, the highest being some 700 or 800 feet above it. There are many passageways and rooms which have never been opened, and with these distant and unexplored openings the magnitude of the Oregon caves is practically unknown.

These natural wonders were discovered in 1874 by Elijah Davidson while bear hunting, and the greater part of the exploration work was done by F. M. Nickerson of Kerby, Ore., in 1877, when four floors of levels were partially opened. Many of the old ladders used at that time are still in use.

Cave mountain, the peak which contains these caves, rises to an elevation of about 5,000 feet and is of limestone formation. The main openings around which the national monument has been created are at an elevation of 4,000 feet, but the entire mountain side for five or six miles shows caverns of various sizes and in all probability is honeycombed throughout its interior like the portion which has been explored. Many small streams are found at different elevations and larger bodies of running water can be heard in bottomless pits, so far as measured. This running water probably accounts for currents of wind that, in some of the galleries blow so hard as to extinguish an open light at once.

The lime deposits take many beautiful forms—massive pillars, delicate stalactites of alabaster whiteness with the crystal drop of water carrying its minute deposit of lime from which they are formed, and broad sheets resembling drapery with graceful curves and waves that were certainly made by varying currents of wind during formation.

In past years visitors have broken off and carried away many of the most valuable specimens, and this destruction, as well as to retain these natural wonders as public property, induced the recommendation to place them in a national monument.

BANK FOR SPINSTERS.

Bostonians Plan to Make Single Women Independent.

A movement has been started in Boston by Mrs. Glendower Evans, a well-known clubwoman, to establish a penshel bank for spinsters, which, she believes, will do away with mercenary marriages, penniless spinsters, worry about husbands and jokes about old maids. She has already presented her plan to the members of the Massachusetts insurance commission and has interested many clubwomen in her project. Her first problem was to determine the age of the spinster, and after careful deliberation she decided that it begins at forty years. Before that age, she says, a woman has good chances of matrimony. A depositor, however, may open an account with the insurance bank as early in life as she pleases, and if she marries before she is forty she receives a goodly sum to start housekeeping with. If she remains unmarried she retains her bank account and at the age of fifty begins to receive a regular annuity. If a woman decides to marry after reaching the age of forty she gets her money back on demand.

The plan is so unusual that Mrs. Evans expects to encounter difficulty, she thinks, and some opposition in making women understand that the plan is to their advantage. But she has a philanthropic band of Boston women back of her who are ready and willing to explain the spinster insurance principle to spinsters.

The insurance commission declares that it is the most unusual banking proposition ever advanced in America and that the women interested are energetic enough to make it conform to the Massachusetts insurance laws.

DIAMOND GOWN FOR ACTRESS

Anna Held Orders Designer to Make Most Startling Dress In the World.

Anna Held, the actress, is determined to make her "farewell" appearance in a veritable "diamond gown."

For this purpose Miss Held gathered all her jewelry, with the exception of her pearls, a few rings, etc., and gave them to a skillful designer in Paris with the naive instruction, "Take these jewels and make the most startling dress in the world."

The gown itself is of the softest oriental fabric of rose pink color. Over this is draped a filmy silver tissue, embroidered around the lower edge with great crimson princesslas. The left side of the gown opens over a scanty underdress in a paler shade of pink which is drawn closely to the figure. The bodice and sleeves on this same side are entirely composed of an arabesque design of purest white stones, hundreds of diamonds being used to carry out this inspiration.

Where the costume opens from bib to knee clasps of diamond solitaires hold it in place. The cloak worn at the same time is of a soft gray meteor, lined with varying shades of pink and the same color scheme of red princesslas is carried out in delicate hand painting. A deep fringe of the latest novelty known as pearl pipe finishes the lower edge of this superb garment.—New York American.

Johann Peter Hebel, the German poet who flourished in the early part of the nineteenth century, had better luck than has fallen to some greater poets. He became a [illegible] and inspector of schools [illegible] pals with the children. One [illegible] asked a class what Solomon was famous for, but none could tell. Turning to the snow outside in the hope that the white (weiss) color might give them the clue to the word wise (weise), he said: "The snow is white. Now, what was Solomon?" Came pat the answer, "Snow white!"

She had just explained how the heart was divided into four chambers and that the right and left halves of the heart were entirely distinct. Then she asked Annie, a child of thirteen, how many hearts a person had.

"Two," answered Annie.

"How is that?" asked the teacher.

"Well, don't some people have a sweetheart?" answered the unlaunched girl.—Los Angeles Times.

A peculiar feature of the fire that wiped out most of the business section of Wexford village is the fact that the Wexford Grand Traverse county line which divides the town was the line where the fire stopped. All the burned buildings are on the "dry" side of the town, while those on the Grand Traverse or "wet" side escaped.

The school situation at Acme still remains unchanged and there will be no school in the district until the matter can be settled by the courts. There are at present two school boards trying to conduct the business of the district. One of these boards has possession of the money of the district, but are unable to secure the use of the town hall for holding school, while the other board can have the hall, but cannot get hold of the funds to conduct the school with. As a result of this conflict the district will have no school this fall.—Eagle.

After about $60,000 has been expended in establishing and maintaining a state forestry reserve in Crawford and Roscommon counties, it develops that through the failure of the defunct forestry commission to have deeds to the reserve placed on record the state has a weak title to part of the big reserve, and the new public domain commission faces the task of settling with tax title speculators to procure a clear title to the property.

Records in the office of the auditor general show that there have continued to be taxes spread against part of the reserve, the taxes have been returned unpaid and the tax titles bought by various ones. Auditor General Fuller says that one man holding a tax title has turned over his claim to the state, but others have not been so generous.

Attorney General Bird has rendered another opinion. This time it is to the effect that druggists may not sell "Malt Extract" or "Hop Tonic" in local option counties without complying with the provisions of the local option law. While it is claimed that these concoctions are not intended to be used for beverages, yet they are used as such and being malt or intoxicating liquors, containing from one to ten per cent of alcohol, they come within the provisions of the local option law. He also says that foreign wholesale drug firms may sell liquors to druggists in this state upon orders sent by druggists, without paying the license fee. This opinion does not cover sales through agents or salesmen, but only such orders as are sent direct by the druggists to the wholesale firm.

During the calendar year of 1908, there were 10,653 births registered in western Michigan, and during the same period there were but 6,578 deaths recorded. This is an excess of births over deaths of 4,075. This means a gain in population of over 40,000 for every ten years, from births alone.

Western Michigan has a low death rate because of the favorable climatic conditions, because of its good drainage by means of the many rivers that cross the territory, and because of the intelligence of its inhabitants.

INTEREST GROWS

People of Western Michigan Are Coming to Realize Opportunities About Them.

WESTERN MICHIGAN DEVELOPMENT BUREAU LAYS OUT EDUCATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

As evidence of the growing interest felt concerning land and farming, there will be held a national Land and Irrigation Exposition at the Coliseum in Chicago, for two weeks following November 29 next.

The original intention was to devote this exposition to a demonstration of the capabilities of costly western irrigated land, but the demand for space by other sections obliged the originators to make it truly national in scope.

The Western Michigan Development Bureau was fortunate in securing 1,500 feet of floor space. It is the intention of the bureau, which embraces the Western Michigan counties of Charlevoix, Antrim, Grand Traverse, Leelanau, Benzie, Manistee, Wexford, Mason, Lake, Oceana, Newaygo, Emmett and Muskegon, to display at the Coliseum the varied products of the farms and orchards of this section.

The exhibit will cost $12,000, but there is no doubt that it will prove wonderfully advantageous in informing the country of the remarkable characteristics of Western Michigan, "the land of opportunity."

Agriculture is the most important of all industries. No land adapted to raising such grand crops as Western Michigan can ever fail to be prosperous. The extent of land now available for settlement is but a drop in the bucket compared with what existed in this country only a few years ago. A few years more and there will be no more cheap lands.

Not only is the land of Western Michigan still comparatively cheap, but this section offers opportunities for profitable agriculture not equaled elsewhere in the world.

Its central locality, close to the great central consuming market of the nation—puts it in a class above the western irrigated land. In Michigan irrigation is unnecessary. Our land is bountifully watered by lakes and never failing streams. The rainfall is abundant and certain through the growing season. Our soil is such that an excess of rain is never harmful. It is perfectly adapted in chemical constituents to the climate, and the present fine crops of potatoes, corn, rye, peas, root crops, clover and so forth were clearly foretold in the grand forests which once covered this section.

The protection afforded by Lake Michigan is the clue to Western Michigan's climate, which is the most equable between the Rocky and Alleghany mountains. All winter long the lake tempers the blasts of west and northwest winds so that Michigan averages 25 degrees warmer than Wisconsin and the northwest.

In the spring the lake holds back fruit buds and vegetation until danger from early frosts is past. Through the summer the great lake tempers the breezes so that the air is moderate in temperature and heavily laden with moisture to refresh vegetation. It prevents tornadoes as well, they being unknown in the twelve counties named.

The light soil of Western Michigan responds quickly to the sun's genial rays so that by midsummer crops are as far advanced as those elsewhere that started earlier. The soil is always fit to be worked, and is cultivated at a small part of the expense of working heavy land.

This light land is underlaid with water everywhere, and it holds moisture so that when rains are infrequent, a rare occurrence, it still encourages growth and fruition when clay lands are baked.

This section is in no remote, uncivilized land. Here are railroads and villages and schools and markets. It is veritably "the land of opportunity" for the man who wants a chance to earn a competence and more, to rear a family and make a place for himself in a thriving community.

At the rate our land is being taken up now by settlers it is easy to foresee the time in a few years when our land will be worth from three to five times what it now sells for. These facts need only to be presented to homeseekers to be appreciated, and will stimulate the flood of immigration, so that thousands of productive farms will be started in this favored section and prosperity will result as the reward for the efforts now being put forth.

More farms mean more villages and interurban railroads and a lower rate of taxation. More farms mean more customers for our stores and shops and factories. More farms mean more money released in our communities at harvest time. More farms mean more money banked in our savings banks, a higher value for present farms, more canning factories, more work for factory people, an enhanced prosperity in every direction and a higher plane of living.

To give Western Michigan the advantages which nature intended her people to enjoy is in short the object of the Western Michigan Development Bureau. The Bureau is composed of representative business men and farmers in the thirteen counties. It extends to all the people of all the thirteen counties an invitation to join hands in a great democratic membership for mutual advantage and to help build here a great and prosperous commonwealth that will make Western Michigan known the world over.

Colonization, as proposed by the Western Michigan Development Bureau, means a lowered rate of taxation.

PRIEST FOR GOOD ROADS.

Smooth Highways In a Missouri County Preached by Father Placid.

Headed by Father Placid, superior of the Conception monastery at Conception, Mo., in Nodaway county, the township board of Jefferson township has put fifty-six of the seventy-eight miles of road in the township under a system of dragging contracts. Farmers have been secured who will drag the roads as often as required by the supervisors at rates running from 50 cents to 75 cents a mile. A dragging consists, under the contracts recently let, of two rounds, or four times over.

When the plan was started Father Placid, accompanied by the township board, visited all the main traveled roads of the township and selected the sections which were in need of grading and would need such improvement before dragging could be effectively started. The various supervisors were then ordered to have these sections graded.

It is expected that after the grading is completed it will cost an average of $15 a mile yearly to maintain the roads in good shape. Father Placid in a sermon delivered at the monastery urged his auditors to aid the good roads movement.

PRIZES FOR GOOD ROADS.

New Scheme In Maryville, Mo., to Encourage Building Five Mile Sections.

Maryville, Mo., will attempt to solve the good roads proposition in a new way. At a recent meeting of the Maryville Commercial club it was decided to formulate a plan to give four prizes aggregating $750 for the four best five mile stretches of road leading into Maryville.

No matter how far out the five mile section may be, just so it is connected to a complete five mile section which touches the city limits or to a section which touches such contiguous section it will be eligible for prizes. The sections thus competing must be kept in order for one year.

Cold Storage.

How long it is possible to keep meats in a frozen state is unknown, but in chemical and microscopic examinations of beef and poultry W. D. Richardson has detected no alteration after a year and a half. As muscular tissue cools to just above 30 degrees F., the water separates as ice, contracting the fibers and forming an armor that it is impossible for bacteria to penetrate. The solution remaining in the fiber becomes very concentrated, so that bacteria already present cannot multiply or remain active, and it is almost certain, though not absolutely proved for all cases, that all germs artificially introduced into frozen meats must lose their vitality and die. Muscular tissue returns to its normal appearance when thawed slowly, though the meats must look changed if the thawing is rapid.

them? Are you crazy?"

"They're a pack of snakes—I mean sneaks. They're assassins. They tried to poison every one of us last"—

Britt smoothed the troubled waters with astonishing ease. The servants returned to their duties, but not without grumbling and no end of savage glances, all of which were leveled at the luckless Deppingham.

"Why poison?" demanded Britt. "They've got knives and guns, haven't they?"

"My dear man, that would put them to no end of trouble cleaning up after us," said Deppingham loftily.

Meanwhile it may be well to depict the situation from the enemy's point of view—the enemy being the Islanders as a unit. They were prepared to abide by the terms of the will so long as it remained clear to them that fair treatment came from the opposing interests. Rasula, the Ararat lawyer, in mass meeting had discussed the document. They understood its requirements and its restrictions; they knew by this time that there was small chance of the original beneficiaries coming into the property under the provisions. Later came the news that marriage between the heirs was out of the question. Then the islanders laughed as they rolled. But they were not to be caught napping. Jacob von Blitz, the superintendent, stolid German that he was, saw far into the future. It was he who set the native lawyer unceremoniously aside and urged competent representation in London. The great law firm headed by Sir John Brodney was chosen. A wide awake representative of the distinguished solicitors was now on his way to the Island with the swarthy committee which had created so much interest in the metropolis during its brief stay.

Jacob von Blitz came to the Island when he was twenty years old. That was twenty years before the death of Taswell Skagg. He had worked in the South African diamond fields and had no difficulty in securing employment with Skagg and Wyckholme.

Von Blitz was shrewd enough to see that the grandchildren were not coming to the Island for the mere pleasure of sojourning there; their motive was plain. It was he who advised—even commanded—the horde of servants to desert the chateau.

He lived, with his three wives, in the hills just above and south of the town itself. The Englishmen who worked in the bank and the three Boer foremen also had houses up there, where it was cooler, but Von Blitz was the only one who practiced polygamy. His wives were Persian women and handsome after the Persian fashion.

One hot, dry afternoon about a week after the reopening of the chateau, the siesta of a swarthy population was disturbed by the shouts of those who kept impatient watch of the sea. Five minutes later the whole town of Ararat knew that the smoke of a steamer lay low on the horizon. No one doubted that it came from the stack of the boat that was bringing Rasula and the English solicitor. Joy turned to exultation when the word came down from Von Blitz that it was the long looked for steamship, the Sir Joshua.

Von Blitz stood at the landing place to welcome Rasula and his comrades and to be the first to clasp the hand of the man from Brodney's.

At last his figure could be made out on the forward deck. His straw hat was at least a head higher than the turban of Rasula, who was indicating to him the interesting spots in the hills.

"He's big," commented Von Blitz comfortably, more to himself than to his neighbor. "And young," he added a few minutes later. Bowles, standing at his side, offered the single comment:

"Good looking."

As the tall stranger stepped from the boat to the pier Von Blitz turned a look of triumph upon Britt, who had elbowed through the crowd a moment before and was standing close by.

The newcomer was an American!

* * * * * * * *

"I've sighted the enemy," exclaimed Bobby Browne, coming up from Neptune's pool—the largest of the fountains. His wife and Lady Deppingham were sitting in the cool retreat under the hanging garden. "Would you care to have a peek at him?"

"I should think so," said his wife, jumping to her feet. "He's been on the island three days, and we haven't had a glimpse of him. Come along, Lady Deppingham."

Lady Deppingham arose reluctantly, stifling a yawn.

They had come to call the new American lawyer "the enemy." No one knew his name or cared to know it, for that matter. Bowles in answer to the telephone inquiries of Saunders said that the new solicitor had taken temporary quarters above the bank and was in hourly consultation with Von Blitz, Rasula and others. Much of his time was spent at the mines. Later on, it was commonly reported, he was to take up his residence in Wyckholme's deserted bungalow far up on the mountain side in plain view from the chateau.

Life at the chateau had not been allowed to drag. The white servants had become good friends despite the natural disdain that the trained English expert feels for the unpolished American domestic.

Miss Pelham, the stenographer from West Twenty-third street, had set her cap for the unsuspecting Mr. Saunders. She had learned in the wisdom of her sex that he was fancy free. Mr. Saunders, fully warned against the American typewriter girl as a class, having read the most shocking jokes at her expense in the comic papers, was rather shy at the outset, but Britt gallantly came to Miss Pelham's defense and ultimate rescue by emphatically assuring Saunders that she was a perfect lady, guaranteed to cause uneasiness to no man's wife.

"But I have no wife," quickly protested Saunders, turning a dull red.

"The devil!" exclaimed Britt, apparently much upset by the revelation.

But of this more anon.

* * * * * * * *

Browne conducted the two young women across the drawbridge and to the small edge of the terrace, where two servants awaited them with parasols.

"There he is! See him?" almost whispered Browne, as if the solitary, motionless figure at the foot of the avenue was likely to hear his voice and be frightened away.

The enemy was sitting serenely on one of the broad iron benches just inside the gates to the park, his arms stretched out along the back, his legs extended and crossed. It was quite apparent that he was lazily surveying the chateau, puffing with consistent ease at the cigarette which drooped from his lips.

"Mr. Britt was right," said Mrs. Browne irrelevantly. She was peering at the stranger through the binoculars. "He is very good looking."

"And you from Boston, too," scoffed Lady Deppingham. Mrs. Browne flushed and smiled deprecatingly.

"Wonder what he's doing here in the grounds?" puzzled Browne.

"It's plain to me that he is resting his audacious bones," said her ladyship, glancing brightly at her colleague.

Three men were approaching by the path which led down from the far away stables. Browne recognized the dark skinned men as servants in the chateau—the major domo, the chef and the master of the stables.

"Lord Deppingham must have sent them down to pitch him over the wall," he said, with an excited grin.

"Impossible! My husband is hunting for sapphires in the ravine back of"—She did not complete the sentence.

The enemy was greeting the statuesque natives with a friendliness that upset all calculations. It was evident that the meeting was prearranged. There was no attempt at secrecy. The conference, whatever its portent, had the merit of being quite aboveboard. In the end the tall solicitor, lifting his helmet with a gesture so significant that it left no room for speculation, turned and sauntered through the broad gateway and on into the forest road. The three servants returned as they had come, by way of the bridle path along the wall.

"The nerve of him!" exclaimed Browne. "That graceful attention was meant for us. I'll have Britt interview those fellows at once. Our kitchen, our stable and our domestic discipline are threatened."

They hastened to the chateau and regaled the resourceful Britt with the disquieting news.

That evening he dragged the reluctant Saunders into the privacy of the hanging garden and deliberately interrupted the game of bridge which was going on.

"Ladies and gentlemen," said Mr. Britt, calmly dropping into a chair near by, "this place is full of spies."

"Spies!" cried four voices in unison Mr. Saunders nodded a positive apology.

Club of "Merry Widowers."

In Austin, Ill., twenty-five men whose wives are out of town have organized the Merry Widowers' club, says a Chicago dispatch. The object is to have a good time while the wives are away. "The club," said a member, "is organized for a harmless good time for men who cannot get away. Our wives know about it—that is, most of them."

A CHILD'S IMPRESSION OF DEATH

How Early Associations May Rob Death of Its Terrors

A simple child,
That lightly draws its breath,
And feels its life in every limb,
What should it know of death!

After considering the subject for years, I believe that the scattered impressions of simple child on the subject of death account for a mental attitude which the mature woman holds to be an invaluable possession. This woman is not afraid—she is not afraid of dying herself and she is not afraid of it for her beloved. Some of her best beloved have died. Their illnesses were painful, their deaths were not. The laying away of the forms of her beloved in the kind bosom of the maternal earth is to her a no more distressing process than the planting of a seed, because she so thoroughly believes in a glorious resurrection for one as well as the other. Those houses of the spirit were—and the memory of them must ever remain—infinitely dear; but they may not be kept with us, and is it not the sweetest thing to do when the spirit which inhabited them has passed on into the World of Light? Funerals and crape this woman hates, she turns sick and faint when called upon to endure them, but she feels in that way about nothing else connected with the beautiful and sacred majesty of death.

Let me turn to the very beginning. When I was a little girl one of my dearest friends was the daughter of the village undertaker. Uncle Dan Bates he was uncle to the whole village was a cabinet-maker, marble-cutter and undertaker. Mrs. Bates was "salt of the earth"—everybody said so—and Dolly was their dear little girl. I spent hours every week with these good people, for they were our neighbors. Sometimes Dolly and I played in the cool, neat sitting-room, under her mother's care but we were more frequently over in the shop with Uncle Dan. We preferred that, for there we did not have to be so careful not to get things "cluttered up," and we could have the companionship of Rover, the Newfoundland dog. Many a time have Dolly and I "dressed up" with shaving curls behind our ears, watching for them as they fell from Uncle Dan's plane, and it did not disturb us at all that they come from wood which was being made into a coffin.

Once Uncle Dan showed me with pride a little snowy casket. It was covered with white velvet, and lined with soft puffs of satin, and it had a dainty little satin pillow. He handled it tenderly. "For Mrs. Raynor's baby," he explained. "I made it as pritty as I could."

I thought it beautiful and said so.

"I'm goin' to give you and Dolly each a patch o' the velvet," he continued. "Dolly's goin' to make a pincushion for her Ma, worked with pink beads, out of hers. What'll you do with yours?"

"I'll make a hood for Laura Julia," I answered promptly. "It's coming winter and she'll need it."—Laura Julia was my doll.

Dear Uncle Dan! When Judge, my pet canary, died, full of years, for he was nearly twice my age, Aunt Mary gave me her blue and white striped handkerchief box for a casket. I laid the darling within it, and covered him with gold and purple pansies. Then I took it over to Uncle Dan to see if it "looked right."

"Beautiful!" said Uncle Dan cordially. "Beautiful!" I couldn't have fixed him prettier myself."

(To be continued next week)

The Difference.

The difference between good stock and scrub stock is the difference between the animal which is adapted to a particular purpose and the one which is not. This is why the pure bred animal is ordinarily so much superior to the mongrel. The one has inherited tendencies, the result of generations of selected ancestry, to develop a certain form or certain qualities; the other has inherited in varying degrees so many conflicting lines of blood that there is no special fitness for any particular purpose.—Progressive Farmer.

Parasites on Sheep.

Some writers claim that sheep might not to be pastured on land more than once a year before it is plowed and reseeded, owing to parasites, but it has been shown that sheep have been kept free from parasites by the use of tar, turpentine and salt. Sheep soon learn to eat tar. One sheep raiser keeps it mixed with turpentine and salt, where it is accessible at all times. About one-half pint of turpentine to one peck of salt is the proportion.

An invention which will be welcome to many women is a hollow gold ball to snap over a diamond or pearl earring. The balls are designed, of course, for traveling, but they will be of use at other times as well. The tiny globes are ornamental and are easily detached. They are made to fit gems of various sizes.

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars worth of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised; these are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction sales write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising will do.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

FREE TO HOMESEEKERS.

Opportunity to Obtain Government Farms In Fertile Section of Nevada.

The great agricultural development now going on in the west is attracting widespread attention, and every "land opening" calls out thousands of letters of inquiry concerning the opportunity for settlers. Just now, unusual interest centers in the Truckee-Carson irrigation project in Nevada, where a thousand farms offered to homeseekers by the government open attractive possibilities.

These lands are free to every bona fide homeseeker, the only expense, with the exception of the nominal filing fee, being the pro rata share of the cost of building the irrigation system. This charge amounts to $30 per acre, payable in ten annual installments, without interest. There is no drawing or any element of chance in applying for one of these farms. It is only necessary to make a homestead entry at the land office at Carson City or at the office of the land commissioner at Fallon, Nev.

Nature has endowed few regions more liberally with all the elements necessary to build up a great commonwealth than are found in this section. The fertile fields grow alfalfa, cereals, fruits, vegetables—in fact, practically all the products of the temperate zone. The climate is dry and delightful, and the valley is singularly free from severe storms. The sun shines almost every day in the year. The great mining regions furnish a home market and good prices for everything that can be raised, and splendid transportation facilities connect the project with the commercial centers of the country. The government irrigation system assures the farmers an abundant supply of water. The rivers offer unlimited possibilities for the development of power.

LIFE JOB OFFER FOR HONESTY

Brakeman Won't Leave Railroad and Is Promoted—He Found $30,000.

Declining a life position of $100 a month, Brakeman William J. Robelen of the Long Island railroad, who a few days ago found a hand bag belonging to Mrs. A. Schwab containing $30,000 worth of jewelry, announced recently that he would stick to railroading and was forthwith promoted from brakeman to be collector, which is but a step removed from that of conductor.

Robelen said he had been with the railroad four years and as he is only twenty-two years old he hopes ultimately to work up to a position in railroading that will eventually pay him seven times $100 a month.

It was on his return from Rockaway to Long Island City that Robelen found the hand bag in a seat in a passenger coach. Opening it he found it filled with diamonds and pearls, besides a sum of money. He turned it over to the company, and it was identified as the property of Mrs. A. Schwab of 318 West Eighty-fourth street, New York city, who had left it in the train when she got off at Hammels station.

Representatives of Mrs. Schwab gave Robelen $100, two suits of clothes and offered him a life position at $100 a month.

Robelen will continue on his run. He declined the company's offer of two weeks' vacation with pay, saying that he preferred to "keep on the job."

Oat, Beets and all Crops are Looking Fine

Farm Buildings are Evidences of Prosperity—Dairy Industry is Coming to the Front

Last week business took a COURIER representative through the townships of Marion and Norwood, in this county and Banks in Antrim county and he was more and more impressed with the great possibilities for farming in this region, progressive farmers being met on every hand.

To mention all the good farmers which we saw, on our travels, would simply be a catalogue of names, so we can only mention a few where something was brought to our attention.

Around Barnard the farm of Ed and Will Graham, is in a good state of cultivation, splendid fields of potatoes and beets standing as evidence of their skill as farmers. In the same neighborhood is the place of Robert Trimble. Mr. Trimble has an orchard which is a source of wealth. From eighteen small trees he sold twenty eight barrels of Wealthys, and the rest of the orchard produced in proportion. Mr. Trimbles oats went thirty-eight bushels to the acre this year, while from three acres of rye he harvested fifty-eight bushels.

William Shapton, proprietor of the Glenwood dairy, has a fine farm with an orchard of several well selected varieties, and several trees of small fruit. Mr. Shapton, at the present time is milking twenty-two cows, and, in order to give his patrons the best to be had, is making improvements in the dairy barn which will make it a model.

Will Momy is a Charlevoix farmer, who is taking up sheep husbandry, which is bound to be a leading industry in this county, in a few years.

Webster Helms has five acres of beets which are looking fine, and has some of the most perfect Northern Spys in his orchard, that was seen.

Isaac Mills, while late in commencing his farm operations this season, has a splendid crop of beets to show for his labors. Fred Gornell has a large orchard which is well laden with fruit.

The farm of Will Burns is one of the finest places in the township, the orchard, beet and corn fields and buildings all being what you would expect to see on the farm of an up-to-date farmer.

Peter Block is another one of Charlevoix county's progressive dairymen, the crops on his farm, proving the truth of the statement that the dairy industry adds untold wealth to the soil. At the present time Mr. Block is milking twenty-three cows.

George Dougherty has a small orchard which adds materially to his income.

D. Spayd conducts a saw mill in connection with his farm, and has a thrifty young orchard. From one small tree Mr. Spayd sold eleven bushel of Wolf River apples. Frank Brock has a field of corn on the farm of Mr. Spayd, which is equal to any seen.

Getting farther into Norwood we pass the Genett farm, the farms of Henry Heeres and George Everett, all of which are witnesses to the value of Charlevoix county land. In this section is located the farm of George Parsons, one of Norwood's progressive farmers. Mr. Parson's has four acres of orchard. He has sold, this year, twenty-two barrell of Wealthy. Mr. Parson's corn is looking fine and his oats yielded four hundred thirty-five bushels from ten acres.

—Ethan Jolliffe has a beautiful home in this section where he conducts a farm in connection with other business, Mr. Jolliffe being state agent of the Bennett Piano Company. Mr. Jolliffe has already sold this year $350 worth of apples and $77 worth of cherries.

Joseph Harwood, just east of the state road in Banks, has a farm of one hundred fifty-one acres, where he settled forty-eight years ago. He has one of the oldest and best orchards in this region. Mr. Harwood has sold three hundred bushels of hand picked apples and has numerous trees of small fruit. All of Mr. Harwood's crops are better than the average. He realizes the value of keeping stock and has a flock of ninety-two sheep and a herd of twenty cattle.

J. W. Parsons has sold $103 worth of fall apples and $100 worth of winter apples. Mr. Parson's corn is looking fine and his oats were a fine crop.

Albert Harwood, from his five acre orchard, sold 300 bushels at $1.85 per barrel of number 1 apples and his seconds at eighty-five cents per hundred in the orchard. All the rest of Mr. Harwood's crops are looking fine.

Sim Blow, N. W. Blow, and Jake Hocksena all have fine farms in this section. Joe Seymour has pears worth going miles to see.

Henry E. Brown is engaged in the production of honey in addition to his other farm operations. Starting out at the beginning of the year with one hundred hives he has increased his colony to 173 hives. Mr. Brown will market 4,000 pounds of strained honey this season. Here we see the result of alfalfa culture in this section, Mr. Brown just having harvested his third crop this season from five acres, the average yield being two and one-half tons. Mr. Brown is preparing five acres more for alfalfa, at this writing.

William and Frank Richardson and Elmer Stocker are successful farmers, who are making money. C. H. Morehouse is another farmer, whose farm shows the result of intelligent labor.

William Shaw a few years ago bought the Chester Denton farm near Norwood at a price inadequate to cover first cost of the buildings. This for the reason that the land had been cropped until it was considered practically worthless, and had been tenantless for several years on this account.

This year Mr. Shaw has ten acres of sugar beets which it is estimated will bring him $750 in cash. The beet tops are considered worth $40 for stock feed and in addition to this he will haul back to his farm beet pulp amounting to from 50 to 80 per cent of the weight of his beets.

He is feeding on the farm about twenty head of cattle, and the manure made by this herd is supplemented by the plowing under of generous crops of green manure. In five years Mr. Shaw has made from his "worthless" farm one of the good farms of a township above the average in quality and it is improving every year.

Thus we might go on enumerating instances where Charlevoix farmers are reaping wealth from the soil. New buildings and new silos greet you on every hand and truly the owner of a farm in Charlevoix county, has a source of wealth which is bound to increase as the years go by and our glorious frost proof climate becomes known to the outer world.

The Central Lake Torch of last week prints the following table showing the returns received from the growing of sugar beets for the West Michigan Sugar Company of this city last season. In addition to these figures, which show average returns per acre of $60.33, the value of the pulp is not figured, which is considerable, nor the making of better farmers which the successful cultivation of the beet crop makes, which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents.

WILL HELP BUILD ROADS

Offer of Large Manufacturing Concern to Three Counties

County road commissioner Henry Leisner gives the following very interesting information in regard to what others think of the value of good roads in Emmet county and what outsiders are willing to do to help it along.

At a recent meeting of the county commissioners, Mr. McMahon, contracting agent for the Cobb & Mitchell company told the commissioners that his company had authorized him to say that for every mile of road built in Springvale or Bear Creek township, they would give three hundred dollars towards its construction, and that they would do the same thing for two townships in Cheboygan, and three townships in Charlevoix county.

Aside from being a good business venture for the C. & M. company, it proves them to be interested in the county for the roads thus built will be permanent, and in use long after they have ceased to need them, and as the roads will cost from $3,000 to $3,500 per mile to construct the Cobb & Mitchell company pay approximately ten per cent of the cost.—Petoskey News.

BUREAU'S NEW PRESIDENT

D. H. Day, of Glenn Haven, Leelanau County

D. H. Day, who was recently elected president of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, is a resident of Glen Haven, Leelanau county. He was born in Ogdensburg, New York, and is a descendent of Anthony Day of early Puritan stock. He came west after finishing his school at Ogdensburg, and eventually became located at Glen Haven, where he now has large interests.

He has timber holdings sufficient to keep his saw mill busy for the coming 15 years. He is sole owner of a railroad, has a large dock projecting into Lake Michigan, which dock affords a stopping place for the lake steamers. He is interested in agriculture, having a 400-acre farm which is equipped with buildings. There are 4,000 trees in his orchards and he possesses a fine Holstein herd. He is the possessor of 1,100 acres of fine second growth timber, the trees now being 10 years old. Golf links have been laid out on his farm which is near the Glen Lake and is his summer home.

PRISIONERS OF WAR

George O. Scott and Major Green Relate Experiences

At High School Monday Morning—An Opportunity Which Will Soon be Past.

Monday morning the pupils of the high school were given a rare treat by being able to listen to short addresses by George O. Scott and Major E. H. Green on their experiences as prisoners of war.

Mr. Scott was confined several months in Andersonville and the horrors of that prison, which he relates seem almost impossible. At the time he was there thirty-three thousand Union soldiers were confined and during the several month's confinement which he suffered, their only food was a pint and one-half of corn meal daily. Mr. Scott told of the breaking out of the famous spring, which must have been an act of Providence.

Mayor Green was confined in seven different prisons, but said, although it had a bad reputation, Libby was the best of the lot. It was while endeavoring to secure the release of Major Green and his fellow captives that Mr. Scott was captured, he relating the story of his capture in a graphic manner.

The talk of these two veterans was something which we will not have the opportunity of listening to many years longer and we hope that more such talks will be given in the future as by listening to what has been endured for the nation, are we not inspired with higher ideals of American Citizenship.

FIRST GAME ON HOME GROUNDS

Was Won by Charlevoix Boys Saturday

CREDIT DUE TO COACH WILSON

And the Able Assistance of the Second Team

Durgan and Paddock Stars. Though all Played the Game—Saturday will Meet Traverse and Try for Championship Title

Before a good sized crowd of husky rooters and enthusiasts, the second football game of the local team was pulled off last Saturday at the north side athletic field between the teams representing Petoskey and Charlevoix high schools. Having met defeat the week previous at the hands of the Boyne City eleven, the locals were determined to wipe off the sting of defeat. The team, under the able direction of Coach Wilson, who has been the making of the team, went through the hardest week's practice it has had and nearly every night has lined up against the second team in order that they might become more efficient in defensive work. Much credit can be given this second team which was organized for practically the purpose of aiding the first team in keeping up the reputation they gained last year.

The team this season is practically new and some of the players know very little about real football. Durgan, Paddock, Krulick, Carey, Papineau, Hull, and Poole have all played before but Wallace Mayne, Lyngklip, Kirby, and Jacobs are just starting out on their football career. Although much improvement was to be expected, still the boys showed up much better than in their game with Boyne. The game was closely contested throughout and the times were when either goal was seriously threatened, although it was generally admitted that the locals played ragged ball.

Gregory kicked off to Charlevoix and the game was on. At first the home team rushed their opponents off their feet and were soon able to send Durgan over for a touchdown. Goal was missed. Score 5 to 0.

From this on it was one continuous seesaw, first one side having the ball and then the other, working it back and forth, neither side having much advantage over the other. Once Paddock made a long end run for a touchdown, but it was illegal and he was brought back.

The absence of many trick plays by the Charlevoix team, particularly the forward pass, was noticeable. It was thought these were not necessary and could be saved and used in the next game with them.

Hull went around end once for about twenty yards and Paddock also made several long runs, but aside from this there was little sensational playing.

From the spectator's point of view Durgan and Paddock were the stars, using good judgment in picking holes and in running, the former especially showing up well in his good interference work. Wallace, at quarters, showed an improvement over the preceeding game and Mayne, at full, played well, this being his first game. The line as a whole played good ball. Jacobs, at guard, did good work as did Krulick, who was put in to replace Lyngklip, in the second half. Carey, at right tackle, showed up well, and strengthened that side of the line considerably. Poole at tackle on the other side, played much better than in the previous game. From the side lines these positions are un-important, but without a strong line no team has any chance of making any kind of a showing.

The foot-ball sisters with their megaphones and colors, were very much in evidence, and helped by encouragement and yells, to cheer the team on. Under the assistance of a good yellmaster, which was lacking Saturday, this body of rooters could give great assistance by their rooting, which is so good to hear when the player loses heart and becomes discouraged.

Next Saturday the team goes down to Traverse City, this being Painting Farm Implements.

The farmer who takes proper care of his implements not only houses them and keeps them in good adjustment, but he paints them occasionally. Paint closes all cracks and keeps out the moisture. It not only preserves the wood, but the iron parts are benefited as well. It also gives the tools a much better appearance. Before applying new paint remove all old paint that is likely to scale off and see that all parts are thoroughly clean and dry

Birds Which Destroy Chinch Bugs.

The birds which are the most beneficial in destroying chinch bugs are quail, prairie chicken, meadow lark, red wing blackbird and cathird. It has come to be the belief of most entomologists and botanists that little help can be expected from the parasite fungi in holding this insect pest in check.

Chickens a Money Bringer.

The chicken is universal, a money bringer of more or less amount upon every farm, and no other staple is so. A farm may have no grain to sell, but it is sure to sell in the year some chickens and eggs. There are no farms where there are no chickens and money return from them. The universality of the chicken on farms gives the business, incidental as it is in each particular case, the first place as a money getter. The sum of infinite small units against the finite and limited larger ones gives the excess to the poultry returns in Missouri.

Odd again is it that this industry, so large and vast, is conducted so easily and quietly. There is no sweat, no strain, no worry over chickens. The industry seems to care for itself and cares extremely well. Men of the farms look slightingly upon it as a woman's affair, unworthy of a grown man's serious attention, and it is attended to almost exclusively by the women and children, while the money return is woman's money to spend as she sees fit, independent of that for support and maintenance furnished as duty calls by the lord and master from sources under his direction, man's work. That the chicken money, the woman's money, is big as it is speaks the story for the hen and the housewife. They outdo the male and anything of his except in the ability to grow.

Mixed Metaphors.

Mixed metaphors are always amusing, and a contemporary has presented us with some good examples.

"You are," said a late lord mayor of Dublin in opposing a municipal scheme, "standing on the edge of a precipice that will be a weight on your necks all the rest of your days."

And this, attributed to an English clergyman: "The young men of England are the backbone of the British empire. What we must do is to train that backbone and bring it to the front."

A member of parliament was responsible for the following: "If I can carried these pestiling little reforms it would only be a flea bite in the ocean."—London Academy.

A BOSS BERRY GROWER.

Horticultural papers of recent date cite the case of a strawberry grower at Creston, B. C., who last year raised 2,206 crates of strawberries—79,941 quarts—from four and one-fourth acres. In explaining the remarkable yield obtained the grower attributes it to careful preparation of and enriching the land before setting the plants; thorough cultivation, snipping blossoms, layering the runners and spraying two or three times the rows and scattering nitrates and covering with mulch pulled from every row the second season. In explanation of the prices received for berries, never less than $2.20 per crate, he lays especial stress on making preparations for the picking and packing of the fruit and shipping to but one dealer in a town. From the standpoint of productiveness and shipping quality he rocks the varieties of berries he has grown in the following order of excellence: Dunlap, Warfield, Parsons Beauty, Gem, Mary, Clyde, Tennessee Prolific and Lady Thompson. Thus getting a gross return of close to $1,200 from each acre of land may be in part due to favorable climatic conditions, but more than all else to the man and the fact that he has made a very thorough business of growing strawberries.

BURNT SUGAR A DISINFECTANT.

The burning of sugar as a disinfectant in sickrooms is a practice followed in many parts of Europe and has usually been viewed by physicians as an innocent superstition, neither beneficial nor harmful. Professor Trillbert of the Pasteur Institute at Paris has recently demonstrated in experiments which he has been making that the burning of sugar develops a remarkably powerful antiseptic gas. Five grams of sugar were burned under a glass bell holding ten quarts, and after the vapor had cooled germs of typhus, tuberculosis, cholera and smallpox were placed in open glass tubes under the bell, and within half an hour all the microbes were found dead. The efficacy of burnt sugar as a purifier of air containing offensive odors is well known and is probably due to the antiseptic principle referred to. This seems to be one instance in which a popular superstition seems unwittingly to have had a very good scientific foundation.

SEED IMPORTATIONS.

Professor N. E. Hansen of the South Dakota experiment station, sent abroad by Secretary Wilson to gather seeds of plants suitable to northern latitudes, has lately returned home. Included in some 250 kinds of seeds which he brought back with him are those of a clover and a variety of alfalfa growing wild in northern Asia south of Lake Baikal, where the temperature sometimes goes to 75 degrees below zero, adapted to the northwestern states; a supply of Persian clover seed suitable for western Texas, New Mexico and Arizona; varieties of alfalfa from north Africa, the original home of this legume, whence it was taken to Spain, to South America and then north and east through the southern states. It is Professor Hansen's belief that the ideal alfalfa of the future will be a hybrid of all the best alfalfas known. The development of these plant importations will be followed with keen interest by all who are watching the remarkable development of the country agriculturally.

BLEACHED FLOUR.

Secretary James Wilson has won out in a contention which he had with the millers of the country about bleached flour, it being his view that subjecting flour to the bleaching process was a violation of the pure food laws. This question takes its origin from the increased production of durum or macaroni wheat, which, owing to an excess above demands for export purposes, the millers have been bleaching and mixing with other flour. Flour from durum wheat contains a large per cent of gluten, is quite yellow in color, and it is because of the desire of the millers, who pay less for the wheat, to sell it under another name that the trouble has arisen. Secretary Wilson holds that this flour should sell under its own colors and sell for just what it is.

While o more luscious fruit than the strawberry might have been created, it is the opinion of a good many that o fruit of this description never was.

How to Clean Straw Matting.

To take up and clean straw matting, first remove as much of the furniture as possible and the pictures and ornaments, then sweep the matting with a damp broom, then remove tacks and roll up one strip at a time and take it either out on the grass or the roof, and if possible hang on a line for awhile. Then sweep the room carefully and take up the first dirt as you go along. Then with plenty of hot water and soap wash floor and open windows wide. Then the matting can be tended to. Sweep the wrong side, strip at a time, and with a pail of clean water with some white soap and a little ammonia in it and soft cloths wash the matting thoroughly and wipe very dry. Go over all the strips on the wrong side and then let them dry. Do the same to the right side and when putting down the matting bring the freshest part into wear. By a little study this can be done, and the wrong side can be used just the same as the right. It helps a lot to put newspapers under, and then you can roll them right up and put them in the rubbish, and it saves a lot of dirt.

How to Cook Chicken and Macaroni.

Cover a jointed fowl with boiling water and boil for five minutes. Then cook until tender with the water just below the boiling point. Fry a tablespoonful of bits of salt pork, sprinkle the pieces of fowl with a half teaspoonful of salt, dust with a tablespoonful of flour and brown in the hot fat. Arrange the pieces in the center of a fireproof platter. Put around it one-fourth of a pound of macaroni which has been broken into half inch pieces and cooked tender in salted water with an onion and part of a carrot. Pour over a sauce made of one-fourth of a cupful each of flour and butter cooked together and one pint of chicken liquor. Sift over with cheese and set in oven long enough to melt cheese.

How to Dry Clean a Waist.

Here is a recently discovered way to clean a white lace waist that is equal to any dry cleaning process ever tried and one that requires an outlay of only a few cents instead of the dollars usually needed to make a soiled lace waist again presentable. This is nothing more than a simple cake of magnesia. Rub the magnesia thoroughly over the garment in question, paying extra attention to the more soiled places, roll it in a cloth and lay it away for several days, then shake it lightly to dislodge any of the chalky substance that may cling to it, and you will behold a metamorphosed waist that will delight your eyes with its freshness.

How to Clean Ivory Handled Knives.

A housewife often finds that the ivory handles of her knives have become spotted. They look rather hopeless, and yet they can be easily cleaned. A piece of chamois skin moistened in water and then dipped in powdered pumice will take any spot off ivory. Good hard rubbing is required, but after that and a good washing in hot water and soap the ivory will look like new.

How to Clean Silver Quickly.

Place two quarts of potato peelings and one quart of water in an iron frying pan or spider, cover and boil ten minutes. Then drop in as many silver spoons, knives and forks as the water will cover. Continue the boiling and in less than ten minutes they will look like new. Remove the silver, wash in usual manner, rubbing well with dry, soft towel.

CHAPTER XVI—Continued.

"Yes, sir, every native servant here is a spy. That's what the enemy was here for today. I've analyzed the situation and I'm right. Ain't I, Mr. Saunders? Of course I am. He came here to tell 'em what to do and how to report our affairs to him. See? Moreover, he's getting the evidence of everybody to prove that Skaggs and Wyckholme were men of sound mind up to the hour of their death. He has the depositions of agents and dealers in Bombay, Aden, Suez and three or four European cities, all along that line. He goes over the day's business at the bank as often as we do as agents for the executors. He knows just how many rubies and sapphires were washed out yesterday and how much they weigh. It's our business, as your agents, to scrape up everything as far back as we can go to prove that the old chaps were mentally off their base when they drew up that agreement and will. Of course if we can prove that insanity has always run through the two families it"—

"Good Lord!" gasped Browne nervously.

—"It would be a great help. If we can show that you and Mrs.—er—Lady Deppingham have queer spells occasionally, it"—

"Not for all the islands in the world," cried Lady Deppingham. "The idea! Queer spells! Please be good enough to leave me out of the lunacy dodge, as you Americans call it."

"Is it necessary to make my husband insane in order to establish the fact that his grandfather was not of sound mind?" queried pretty Mrs. Browne, with her calmest Boston inflection.

"It depends on your husband," said Britt coolly. "If he sticks at anything which may help us to break that will he's certainly insane. That's all I've got to say about it."

"Well, I'm hanged if I'll pose as an insane man," roared Browne.

"Mr. Saunders hasn't asked me to be insane, have you, Mr. Saunders?" asked Lady Agnes in her sweetest scorn.

"I don't apprehend"— began Saunders nervously.

"Saunders," said Britt calculatingly and evenly, "next thing we'll have to begin hunting for insanity in your family. We haven't heard anything from you on this little point, Lord Deppingham."

"I don't know anything about Mr. Saunders' family," said Deppingham stiffly. Britt looked at him for a moment, puzzled and uncertain. Then he gave a short, hopeless laugh and said under his breath:

"Holy smoke!"

When he finally called the conference adjourned and prepared to depart he calmly turned to the stenographer.

"Did you get all this down, Miss Pelham?"

"Yes, Mr. Britt."

"Good!" Then he went away, leaving the quartet unconsciously depressed by the emphasis he placed upon that single word.

The next day but one it was announced that the enemy had moved into the bungalow. From time to time his gray, blue or white clad figure could be seen directing the operations of the natives who were engaged in rehabilitating Wyckholme's "nest."

The chalean was now under the very eye of the enemy.

CHAPTER IX.

THE AMERICAN BAR.

"YOU'RE wanted at the phone, Mr. Britt," said Miss Pelham. It was late in the evening a day or two afterward. Britt went into the booth. He was not in there long, but when he came out he found that Miss Pelham had disappeared. The coincidence was significant—Mr. Saunders was also missing from his seat on the window sill at the far end of the long corridor. Britt looked his disgust and muttered something characteristic. Having no one near with whom he could communicate, he boldly set off for the hanging garden, where Deppingham had installed the long idle roulette paraphernalia.

"Say," he said without ceremony, "the enemy's in trouble. Bowles just telephoned. There's a lot of excitement in the town. I don't know what to make of it."

"Then why the devil are you breaking in here with it?" growled Deppingham.

"This'll interest you, never fear. There's been a row between Von Blitz and the lawyer, and the lawyer has unmercifully thrashed Von Blitz. Good Lord, I'd like to have seen it, wouldn't you, Browne? Say, he's all right, isn't he?"

"What was it all about?" demanded Browne.

"It seems that Von Blitz is in the habit of licking his wives," said Britt. Britt and Saunders found the enemy waiting for them under the awning in front of the bank. He looked a man from the top of his head to the tips of his canvas shoes. Every line of his long body indicated power, activity, health. Both men were surprised by the eager, sincere manner in which he greeted them.

"Glad to see you, gentlemen," he said. He was a head taller than either, coatless and hatless, a lean but brawny figure in white crash trousers. "It's very good of you to come down. If you'll come to my shack I'll mix you a real American cocktail, a mint julep, a brandy smash or anything you like in season. There's a fine mint bed up my way, just back of the bungalow. It's more precious than a ruby mine, let me tell you. And yet I'll gladly exchange 300 carats of mint, Mr. Britt, for a dozen boxes of your cigarettes. Do you know, gentlemen, I made the greatest mistake of my life in failing to bring a ton of these little white sticks out with me. I thought of Gordon gin, both kinds of vermuth, brandy, and all that sort of thing, and completely forgot the staff of life. I happen to know that you have a million packages of them, more or less, up at the chateau. Mr. Spelt told me. I dare say you know that I have spies up there all the time. Don't pay any attention to 'em. You're at liberty to set spies on my trail at any time. Here we are. This is the headquarters for the Mine Owners' Association of Japat."

He led them down a flight of steps and into a long, cool looking room some distance below the level of the street.

"The Mine Owners' association, gentlemen, comprises the entire population of Japat. Here is where I receive my clients. Here is where they receive their daily loaf, if you will pardon the simile. I sit in the chalres; they squat on the rugs. We talk about rubies and sapphires as if they were peanuts. Occasionally we talk about our neighbors. Shall I make three mint juleps? Here, Selim! The ice, the mint and the straws—and the bottles. Sit down, gentlemen. This is the American bar that Baedeker tells you about—the one you've searched all over Europe for, I dare say."

"Reminds me of home, just a little bit," said Britt as the tall glasses were set before them. The Englishman was still clothed in reticence. "They shan't catch me napping," was the sober reflection of Thomas Saunders.

The enemy planted the mint in its bed of chipped ice. "The sagacity that Taswell Skaggs displayed in erecting an ice plant and cold storage house here is equaled only by John Wyckholme's foresightedness in maintaining a contemporaneous mint bed. I imagine that you, gentlemen, are hoping to prove the old codgers insane. Between the three of us, and man to man, how can you have the heart to propose anything so unkind when we look, as we now do, upon the result of their extreme soundness of mind? Here's how!"

Selim passed the straws, and the three men took a long and simultaneous "pull" at the refreshing julep. Mr. Saunders felt something melt as he drew the subsequent long and satisfying breath. It was the outer rim of his cautious reserve.

"I think we'll take you up on that proposition to trade mint for cigarettes," said Mr. Britt. "Mr. Browne, my client, for one, will sanction the deal. How about your client, Saunders?"

"I can't say as to Lady Deppingham, but I'm quite sure his lordship will make no objection."

"Then we'll consider the deal closed. I'll send one of my boys over tomorrow with a bunch of mint. Telephone up to the bungalow when you need more. By the way," dropping into a curiously reflective air, "may I ask why Lady Deppingham is permitted to ride alone through the unfrequented and perilous parts of the island?" The question was directed to her solicitor.

"Perilous? What do you mean?"

"Just this, Mr. Saunders," said the enemy, leaning forward earnestly. "I'm not responsible for the acts of these islanders. There are men among them who would not hesitate to dispose of one or both of the heirs if they could do it without danger to their interests. What could be more simple, Mr. Saunders, than the death of Lady Deppingham if her horse should stumble and precipitate her to the bottom of one of those deep ravines? She wouldn't be alive to tell how it really happened."

"My word!" was all that Saunders could say, forgetting his julep in contemplation of the catastrophe.

"He's right," said Britt promptly. "I'll keep my own client on the straight and public path. He's liable to tip over too."

"Deuce take your Browne," said Saunders, with mild asperity. "He never rides alone."

"I've noticed that," said the enemy coolly. "He's usually with Lady Deppingham. It's lucky that Japat is free from gossips, gentlemen."

"Oh, I say," said Saunders, "none of that talk; you know."

"There's another thing I want to speak of," said the enemy, arising to prepare the second round of juleps. "I hear that your clients and their partners for life are in the habit of gambling like fury up there."

"Gambling?" said Britt. "What rot!"

"The servants say that they play bridge every night for vast piles of sapphires uncountable. Oh, I get it straight."

"Why, man, it's all a joke. They use gun wads and simply play that they are rubies."

"My word," said Saunders, "there isn't a ruby or sapphire in the party."

"That's all right," said the enemy, standing before them with a bunch of mint in one hand and the bowl of ice in the other. "Every man in Japat thinks that your people are gambling with jewels that belong to the corporation. They think there's something crooked, d'ye see? My advice to you is, Stop that sort of joking."

"By Jove," said Saunders, taking a straw and at the same time staring in open mouthed wonder at the tall host, "you appall me! It's most extraordinary."

"This is all offered in a kindly spirit, you understand," said the magnanimous enemy. "We might as well live comfortably as to die unseasonably here. Another little suggestion, Mr. Saunders. Please tell Lord Deppingham that if he persists in snooping about the ravines in search of rubies he'll get an unmanageable bullet in the back of his head some day soon. He has no right to a single ruby, even if he should see one and know what it was. Just tell him that, please, Mr. Saunders."

The enemy piloted them steadily through the town.

"I shall, confound him," exploded Saunders, smiting the table mightily. "He's too uppish anyhow. He needs taking down."

"Ah, Selim," interrupted the enemy as the native boy entered, "no mail, eh?"

"No, excellency, the ship is not due to arrive for two weeks."

"Ah, but, Selim, you forget that I am expecting a letter from Von Blitz's wives. They promised to let me know how soon he is able to resume work at the mines."

"I hear you polished him off neatly," said Britt, with a grin.

"Our man is a great man—next to Mohammed."

too, sahib. We have told him that you have the great power. He shows us that he can call upon the English ships as well, for he comes last from London. He can have both, while you have only one. Besides, he says you cannot send a message in the air without the wire unless he give permission.—He have a little machine that catch all the lightning in the air and hold it till he reads the message. Our man is a great man—next to Mohammed."

Britt passed his hand over his brow, staggered by these statements.

"Say, he's smoother than I thought. Most men would have been — fools enough to say that it was all poppycock about me sending wireless messages and calling out navies, but not he! And that machine for trapping the air! Say, we'd better go slow with that fellow. Shall I call him up on the phone and head off the strike?"

"Anything, Mr. Britt, to get back our servants," said Lady Deppingham, who had come up with Mrs. Browne.

When Britt reappeared after a brief stay in the telephone booth he was perspiring freely, and his face was redder, if possible, than ever before.

"He was very peremptory at first and very agreeable in the end. I said we'd come down at 4:30. He asked me to bring some cigarettes. Say, he's a strenuous chap. He wouldn't haggle for a second."

DANGER IN DELAY

Kidney Diseases are Too Dangerous for Charlevoix People to Neglect

The great danger of kidney troubles is that they get a firm hold before the sufferers recognizes them. Health is gradually undermined. Backache, headache, nervousness, lameness, soreness, lumbago, urinary troubles, dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease follow in merciless succession. Don't neglect your kidneys. Cure the kidneys with the certain and safe remedy, Doan's Kidney Pills, which has cured people right here in this locality.

Mrs. Thomas Barber, Elm St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I am pleased to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, in view of all they have done for me. Kidney and bladder trouble caused me much suffering. The kidney secretions were unnatural and filled with sediment and I was subject to backache and severe pains in my loins. In the morning when I arose, my back was so lame that I could hardly get around to attend my housework. Some time ago I obtained a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they were more effective than any other kidney medicine I had ever taken. The backache and pains in my loins have been relieved and I now feel better in every way."

CIRCLES AND CIRCUMSTANCES.

Events That Led Up to the End of the Estrangement.

By BELLE MANIATES.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

As the wake of a ship looks to be but a zigzag line of many tacks which, united, make a straight line, so the retribution of Syra Greenbury was wrought by self evolving circles. The first infinitesimal ring was the acquisition of a suitor by Molly Greenbury, and all the unwritten laws of courtship yielded to the lovers the exclusive use of the front porch.

The only member of the Greenbury household actually discommoded by this arrangement was Syra himself. His worthy spouse clung to the inside of the house day and night.

"Just as lieve set back as front," philosophically remarked Syra as he betook himself to the back porch.

He grumbled, however, over his limited space. The back porch was a receptacle for the hens, washing machine, plant stand, lawn mower and sprinkling pot. His wife renewed her hopes of his building the long desired, long deferred summer kitchen, a structure Syra considered superfluous.

Toward midsummer his place of pipe was again invaded. Kitty Greenbury, the third daughter, became the proud possessor of a "steady" who plainly meant business. So did Kitty. Willing to be relieved from the support of at least one of his many daughters, Syra stood ready to remove all obstacles from the path of true love.

"You can have the side porch, Kitty," he offered.

"There ain't room for two chairs," objected Kitty.

"I guess one chair will do," was the laconic reply.

"We ain't going to be cooped up by all that stuff," declared fart tempered Kitty. "I am going to swing a hammock."

"Guess you will have to build, Sy," suggested his wife.

The next day the delivery of a load of lumber brought joy to the heart of Mrs. Greenbury, and when Syra came home that night he began the erection of his building down on the river bank.

"For land sakes, what are you going to build a summer kitchen down there for?" demanded Mrs. Greenbury.

"This ain't no summer kitchen. It's going to be a place for me—just me—and I ain't going to be rooted out by any feller."

Work was begun in earnest. Kitty's steady took off his coat and fell to work. The building when completed consisted of one apartment and was adorned by a spacious "stoop," which faced the river. Molly and her lover resumed possession of the front porch, and Kitty adorned her precincts with hammock and porch pillows.

Mary, the eldest daughter, shunned the moonlight, which invoked memories too sweetly sad. But on the day the new building was completed she became active for the first time in months. When Syra came home at night and went out to inspect the pride of his heart he uttered an exclamation of delight. Lace and white rugs were on the floor, fluffy curtains festooned the windows, Syra's two favorite pictures, a portrait of Lincoln and one of Queen Elizabeth signing a death warrant, adorned the walls. A long table covered with a gay scarf was strewn with the weekly and biweekly papers. A couch, easy chair, a receptacle for pipe, tobacco and matches constituted the furnishings.

"Say, Mary, even if I did build it just for me, it's always open to you," declared Syra.

She took him at his word and fell into the habit of sitting out there in the evening with her father. She was Syra's favorite daughter, and they spent many an evening there in silence, he puffing at his pipe and she gazing through the low hanging boughs at the moon path on the waters. He was guiltily conscious of her thoughts, for he had put the bitter into her sweet.

He had engaged in a fierce dispute over politics with George Winters and had ordered him from the house. George had then urged Mary to consider herself banished also and come to a home of their own. Mary, sad, but dutiful, would not consent. Winters' temper was tempestuous, and the angry young lover left town, sending Mary word that she or the "old man" must make the next move. The three remained firm in their silence. One faint glimmer of hope remained with Mary.

The long, leebound winter that followed brought no encouragement to this hope.

In the early spring everything loosened save Syra. The river which found its serene and sluggish way past the Greenbury domicile received the accumulation of snow and ice. Heavy rains added new impetus, and the shallow stream became at once rapid and noisy. One morning it leaped up the bank and beat at the walls of Syra's little retreat. The Greenburys began the work of transferring the furnishings from the little summer house.

"I am glad the house is so far from the river," observed Mrs. Greenbury as the river rose to the level of the yard.

Mary's watchful eyes filled with tears as she slipped out for a last farewell to the doomed little place. The young Greenburys reluctantly departed for school, and Syra, who had deemed it wise to remain at home and guard his fortress, was doing some carpentry work when he heard a warning shout from a neighbor. He rushed into the yard in time to see the waters circle about the little structure and sweep it downstream.

"Mary's in there!" cried his wife wringing her hands.

In corroboration of this proffer Mary came out on the porch of the little house as it went around the bend in the river. Syra rushed along the bank until he came to a boat. He leaped into the boat and shoved off. His little craft was whirled through the waters and around the bend of the river. Then he saw the smokehouse some distance ahead. Syra's progress was impeded by a succession of driftwood the rush which the desperate pushed his boat. When he reached the smokehouse the house was far in the lead.

His heart moved [illegible] the scenes on the shore were like moving pictures. The little town of Marathon ten miles from home, soon passed. The knowledge that a dam was only six miles further inspired to him a redoubling [illegible] His boat seemed to fairly fly then ever. His craft still followed the house, now a mile ahead, wherever fate should lead it. Another bend in the river shut the object of his pursuit from his straining eyes. Again his course was temporarily stayed by collision with a mass of wreckage, and it was some time before he rounded the curve.

His heart leaped. The little house was safely lodged on shore, and a big flat bottomed boat was being rowed toward him.

"The girl is safe," the oarsman assured him.

His little boat was brought alongside the smokehouse, and he followed his rescuers up the embankment to where Mary stood within the harbor of George Winters' encircling arm.

"Oh, father!" she cried with a breathless laugh as she ran to him.

George followed doubtfully.

"Well, George," said Syra grimly, extending the hand of reconciliation, "you said 'either Mary or the old man' must come to you. And we've both come, you see."

Concerning the new Michigan Central depot at that station, the Wolverine Courier says:

The Michigan Central is sparing no pains in making the new depot and grounds at this point a model. It is said to be the best from Bay City to Mackinaw with the possible exception of Standish.

Some one wielded an ax with telling effect among the herd of William H. Spies, one day this week, slashing several of his best milkers up in bad shape, although not injuring them so bad that they will die.

Suspicion rested upon a neighbor with whom Spies had had trouble, and Sheriff Clute brought the man to the city where he was examined before Prosecuting Attorney Crowley. The man proved to the satisfaction of the authorities that he did not do the job, although the rest of the family was not freed of suspicion, and the balance of the family, the wife and children were brought down this morning and examined, but were let go again because of a lack of evidence or facts to hold them.

Someone also slashed some milkers in the herd of milkman Belanger this week. The case has not rested yet, but is being hunted out with all of the energy of the sheriff's office and it is hoped Mr. Clute and his deputies will be able to bring the miscreants to punishment.

ROAD OILING DEVICE.

Portable Machine to Mix and Spread at Same Time.

WILL INTEREST ENGINEERS.

Process Is Cheap, and It Is Expected to Revolutionize Work on Country Roads—Cost For Treating Highways Will Vary.

Oiling of city and country roads is rapidly becoming a recognized necessity throughout the United States, and St. Louis and St. Louis county are, as usual, in the lead. City streets have been treated for some time past, and residents of St. Louis county are planning to oil the main traveled roads.

Street Commissioner Travilla advocated oiling of streets in St. Louis and has made a careful study of the proposition with a view to perfecting the work. After months of study of conditions in St. Louis and the equipment used in other cities, particularly in Europe, he has evolved a portable oil-asphalt melting and fluxing plant that will revolutionize the work. The plant is the first of its kind in the world and will attract the attention of highway engineers throughout the United States. Its cost is less than $1,200, and the process to be used has been given a thorough test.

Street Commissioner Travilla in describing the new apparatus and the progress of road oiling said:

The oil-asphalt melting and fluxing portable plant is a new departure in machinery for road treatment. After two years' experience with light and heavy oils I became satisfied there was room for improvement by adding asphalt to heavy oil for road treatment, and the result of this investigation has brought about the construction of the portable plant.

There is no subject today which is being discussed more frequently than methods of improving our highways. The oiling of roads is making considerable progress in the United States with good effect, but much better results can be obtained by the application of a layer of hot oil-asphalt compound to the road surface. In this way the road absorbs the mixture and also forms a very solid coating and a strong binder for the particles of sand and the larger stone in the macadam road, which carries the load.

The dust which usually results from the wear of the road disappears, and at the same time the natural expense of keeping up the road is diminished, which more than compensates for the cost of the process. This comes from the great reduction of expense for sprinkling a road and scraping the mud as well as from the great durability of the roadbed.

The cost per square yard for treating the road by the new process will vary from 7 cents to 14 cents, depending on the amount of sand and asphalt used. The plant consists of a melting and agitation kettle, an air pressure for furnishing compressed air for agitating the oil-asphalt and for forcing it from the kettle to a sprinkling wagon; also a steam pump as an auxiliary for pumping heavy oil from the tank car to the melting kettle and a steam roller for furnishing steam for the operation of the air pressure and steam pump.

The kettle has a capacity of 1,350 gallons and is divided transversely into two equal parts, one compartment being intended for melting and mixing the oil-asphalt, the other for agitating the oil-asphalt.

The method of operation is: The oil-asphalt compound is put in the kettle and the mixture melted and agitated from the low pressure reservoir to the required temperature and consistency, when it is drawn into the closed compartment and then delivered to the sprinkling wagon by means of an air pressure. In the meantime another batch is being heated and mixed in the open compartment. One hour's time is required for heating and agitating 1,350 gallons.—St. Louis Republic.

Good Road Notes.

Good roads will make the vehicles last longer.

Good drainage is absolutely necessary in building a good road.

Every man who owns an automobile, a horse or a bicycle is interested in good roads.

The highways and roadside are usually a fair index of the people living in the vicinity.

No Good There.

The road drag will do nothing to improve the highway so long as it lies unused at the side of the road.

TAKEN BY STORM.

The Man Who Was Always on Hand When Trouble Came.

BY ALICE WHITE.

[Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

In her younger days Bertha had made fun of him.

When she was only sixteen—Ralph little more—she had caught her foot in a railroad bridge, and he had run bravely to her rescue and released her. Then when he had her safely in the sleigh, with the great yawning trestle below them and the engine, rushing, passed them, he had forgotten to release his hold of her. She had become angry at the snubbing of the engineer and had jerked herself away impatiently without so much as a word to thanks.

Then there was the runaway horse and the mixing of reins and dashboards. Ralph was the first to come and pull her from the debris. When she told of a pain in her arm he hurried away for the doctor. Afterward he sat by her while her arm was bathing and read from the book that interested her.

Even then Bertha scalled when Ralph's name was mentioned.

Always he was at her side when she encountered trouble of any kind, but she seemed not to notice him. A casual nod of thanks and an indifferent smile were all she ever gave him.

Years after that last incident the cyclone came. Bertha had shaken her head at two young men before that event. She had been away to school and had visited summer resorts and had been at the seaside and the winter hotels in the south.

These men were eligible, too, as men go. But somehow there seemed to be something lacking. It made little difference where the incompatibility was. Bertha gave her answer, and her mother was surprised when the ultimatum to the second one was given.

"I do not wish to influence you," Mrs. Ogden said, "but I fear you may make a mistake. There is something to recommend the latter. He is wealthy as well as good looking."

"But I do not feel toward him as I should. Some way there is something wrong with me, and I cannot tell what. I know he is wealthy, and all that, drives good horses and has servants to answer every beck and call. It would have been an easy life, with lots of society and all that sort of thing. Only the giving up of my ideals—it would be too much. I could not."

The mother sighed as she gazed on the closed door. "What can she want," she asked of the silence, "or whom?"

Time answered the mother, but it was two years later.

Bertha breathed the air of the western prairie in the early spring and saw the fields grow green and then pink and white, while the wind came over the hills with the freshness of a new summer on their wings. Alone she rode into the country and knew the roads that led to the town, where her brother was in business.

One day in May, when the fields were blue with blossoms, she rode slowly toward the hotel. On the hill beyond were the spires and roofs of the city, and across her path was a railroad with its glittering ribbon of steel winding into the distance.

But there was a peculiar cloud in the southwest, twisting and winding into the sky. Bertha met a farmer. When he had passed there was a sound of horses' hoofs in the dusty road. The air, however, was still. Even the birds and bees were silent. The cloud grew darker and pushed nearer the ground. Faster and faster and blacker and blacker came the impending storm.

Bertha measured the distance to the town with her eye and glanced over her shoulder at the threatening cloud. Try her best, she could not reach the houses before the rain came. She urged her pony into a canter. She rode past lanes and fields that were open to the whole world. Birds flew close to the ground and darted into the hollow beyond. Bits of dust danced in the road and whipped away into nothingness. Stems of grass that had withstood the snows of winter loosened themselves from the fence and rolled past. Once a stray paper thundered along. Yet the girl could feel little if any wind.

Suddenly the sky grew dark, and the sun, which had been shining regardless of the things going on below, was shut out. The snakelike cloud shot into the sky above, and all was dark. In the distance was the roaring of a cataract. And nearer and nearer it came, filling the universe with fear. The dust of the road swept back, and there was a contrary current in the air. Even the pony stopped and turned about. Neither did he mind the whip which fell on his flank, but backed and turned about until he faced the cloud in the distance and then stubbornly stood there. Bertha dismounted and tossed the useless rein over a post of the wire fence and whipped her own skirts as she gazed with fright at the cloud—the cloud twisting and roaring and the lightning flashing from the middle of its dark folds.

Bertha was alone.

The course of the cloud changed, and it seemed to hurry across the valley that stretched away between the girl and the houses and spires. A cloud of dust followed and the roaring, almost unbearable, of the thunder. In front was a farmhouse in the path of the cloud. Bertha clasped her hands as she saw the inmates hurry like wild quails into the orchard, saw the barns and the stacks melt, as it were, in the blast, and where they had stood there was a tangle of them when the cloud passed on. But the house was there, and by the mist of dust the family came from the trees of the orchard.

Then the wind reached Bertha, and the grass bent to the ground and seemed to hide under the sod below. The pony bent his neck and closed his eyes. The cloud hastened beyond the girl, and she stepped back to await the coming of the elements stepped into the path and was caught by a friendly hand.

Ralph Meere was there.

Why, Bertha could not inquire, for the rage of the cyclone was too loud, and the play of the lightning and thunder too sharp. She understood when he motioned to a hollow beyond a hill, and like a deer she ran to safety. Ralph was at her side and caught her arm, pulling her down as the storm passed over their heads and left its cloud of dust and splinters and paper and straw and grass. Gradually the roaring died away, and even the cloud unwound its hold upon the sky and disappeared as a puff of smoke disappears.

Bertha then thought of the rescuer by her side. "Why are you here?" she asked, turning to her companion.

"Business." Ralph replied. "You see, my horse refused to go farther, and I tried to come here. Then I saw a woman in the road and brought her along. It was you. But I deserve no credit."

"Whenever I have been in trouble you have come to me. Do you remember?"

"Remember!" And Ralph told her of the things he had meant to say, and Bertha listened.

When she had found her horse and had returned to the village she wrote to her mother in the east, and the letter lay for many days unanswered. Then Mrs. Ogden said Ralph would be welcome. When the long days came there was a wedding, and Ralph took his place forever at Bertha's side.

Not Worth Shingling.

The late Thomas Bone, "the sailor's missionary," was the soul of kindliness, but he was seldom worsted in repartee. One of the many instances of this given in his published life is the following:

"His work was not without its humorous side. Among the new men there were always some who sought a little amusement at his expense, but they reckoned without their host. His kindly manner never changed. The smile never left his face. There was no venom in the retort, but it seldom failed to silence the interrupter. The laugh raised at his expense made it quite certain that no second attempt would be made.

"Seeing him approaching one day, one of a group of sailors announced his intention of having some fun. He stepped forward and removed his hat, revealing a perfectly smooth crown, and asked:

"'Can you tell me why my head is so bald, while all my companions have plenty of hair?'

"'I don't know,' was the smiling reply, 'unless the reason given me the other day by a farmer would apply—that an empty barn is not worth shingling.'"—Judge.

Etiquette.

The late George W. Harvey, Washington's noted caterer, was an admirable after dinner speaker. A Washington correspondent recalled the other day a press banquet that Mr. Harvey once attended.

"He gave," said the correspondent, "some funny advice to the woman's page editors present. He suggested that they brighten up their 'etiquette departments' by the introduction of really interesting rules of etiquette.

"Then he rattled off a lot of rules like this:

"Never wear automobile goggles when riding on an electric car. Our best people consider it pretentious.

"If some one accidentally treads on your heel and says, 'I beg your pardon,' make no reply. If you would be thought a true gentleman simply scowl and pass on.

"A gentleman should never allow a lady to pay for anything. This, of course, does not refer to the titled husbands of American heiresses.

"Never try to alight from a lady's train when in motion.

"If you are a golfer and have had bad luck say, 'Deary, deary me!'"

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Just the rough edges, Mr. Britt. He is now a gem of purest ray serene By the way, I hope you'll not take my mild suggestions amiss."

"There's nothing I object to except your power to call strikes among our servants. That seems to me to be rather high handed," said Britt good naturedly.

"No doubt you're right," agreed the other, "but you must remember that I needed the cigarettes."

"My word!" muttered Saunders admiringly.

"Look here, old man," said Britt, his cheeks glowing; "it's mighty good of you to take this trouble for"—

"Don't mention it. I'd only ask in return that we three be a little more sociable hereafter. We're not here to cut each other's throat, you know and we've got a deadly half year ahead of us. What say?"

For answer the two lawyers arose and shook hands with the excellent enemy. When they started for the chateau at 7 o'clock, each with six mint juleps about his person, they were too mellow for analysis. The enemy, who had drunk but little, took an arm of each and piloted them sturdily through the town.

CHAPTER X.

THE SLOUGH OF TRANQUILLITY.

THREE months stole by with tantalizing slowness. The autumn passed on into winter without a change of expression in the benign face of nature. Christmas day was as hot as if it had come in midsummer; the natives were as naked, the trees as fully clad. The six months were passing away in spite of themselves. Ten weeks were left before the worn but determined heirs could cast off their bonds and rush away to other climes. It mattered little whether they went away rich or poor. They were to go! Go! That was the richest thing the future held out to them.

True, they rode and played and swam and romped without restraint, but beneath all of their abandon there lurked the ever present pathos of the jail, the asylum, the detention ward.

Not until the end of January was there a sign of revolt against the ever growing, insidious condition of melancholy. As they turned into the last third of their exile they found heart to rejoice in the thought that release was coming nearer and nearer. The end of March—eight weeks off! Soon there would be but seven weeks, then six!

And all this time the islanders toiled as they had toiled for years. They reckoned in years, while the strangers cast up time's account in weeks and called them years. Each day the brown men worked in the mines piling gems into the vaults with a resoluteness that never faltered.

From London came disquieting news for all sides to the controversy. The struggle promised to be drawn out for years, perhaps. The lordly legatees, marooned in the far south seas, began to realize that even after they had spent their six months of probation they would still have months, even years, of waiting before they could touch the fortune they had claim to. The islanders also were vaguely awake to the fact that everything might be tied up for years despite the provisions of the will. A restless, stubborn feeling of alarm spread among them. This feeling gradually developed itself into bitter resentment. Hatred for the people who were causing this delay was growing deeper and fiercer.

Their counselor, the complacent enemy, held himself aloof from the men and women that his charges were fighting. He met the two lawyers often, but nothing passed between them that could have been regarded as the slightest breach of trust. He lived like a rajah in his shady bungalow, surrounded by the luxuries of one to whom all things are brought indivisible. If he had any longing for the society of women of his own race and kind, he carefully concealed it. His indifference to the subtle though unmistakable appeals of the two gentlewomen in the chateau was irritating in the extreme. When he deliberately, though politely, declined their invitation to ten one afternoon their humiliation knew no bounds.

Lady Deppingham and Mrs. Browne should not be misunderstood by the reader. They loved their husbands—I am quite sure of that—but they were tired of seeing no one else, tired of talking to no one else. Moreover, in support of this one sided assertion, they experienced from time to time the most melancholy attacks of jealousy. If Mrs. Browne in plain despair went off for a day's ride with Lord Deppingham, that gentleman's wife was sick with jealousy. If Lady Agnes strolled in the moonlit gardens with Mr. Browne, the former Miss Fate of Boston could scarcely control her emotions. They shed many tears of anguish over the faithlessness of husbands, tears of hatred over the recklessness of temptresses. Their quarrels were fierce, their upbraidings characteristic, but in the end they cried and kissed and "made up."

They did not know, of course, that the wily Britt, despite his own depression, was all the while accumulating the most astounding lot of evidence to show that a decided streak of insanity existed in the two heirs.

"If they could only be married in some way," was Britt's private lament to Saunders from time to time when despair overcame confidence.

"I've got a ripping idea," Saunders said one day.

"Let's have it. You've always got 'em. Why not divide with me?"

"Can't do it just yet. I've been looking up a little matter. I'll spring it soon."

"How long have you been working on the idea?"

"Nearly four months," said Saunders, yawning.

"Gad, this climate is enervating!" was Britt's caustic comment.

Saunders was head over head in love with Miss Pelham at this time, so it is not surprising that he had some sort of an idea about marriage, no matter whom it concerned.

Night after night the Deppinghams and Brownes gave dinners, balls, musicales, "bridges," masks and theater suppers at the chateau. First one would invite the other to a great ball, then the other would respond by giving a sumptuous dinner.

One morning during the first week in February the steamer from Aden brought stacks of mail—the customary newspapers, magazines, novels, telegrams and letters. It was noticed that her ladyship had several hundred letters, many bearing crests or coats of arms.

At last she came to a letter of many pages covered with a scrawl that looked preposterously fashionable. Lady Agnes gave a sudden shriek and, leaping to her feet, performed a dance that set her husband and Bobby Browne to gasping.

"She's coming!" she cried ecstatically, repeating herself a dozen times.

"Who's coming, Aggy?" roared her husband for the sixth time.

"The princess! Deppy, I'm going to squeeze you! I must squeeze somebody! Isn't it glorious? Now—now—now life will be worth living in this beastly place."

Her dearest friend, the princess, had written to say that she was coming to spend a month with her.

"In her uncle's yacht, Deppy—the big one that came to Cowes last year, don't you know? Of course you do. Don't look so dazed. He's cruising for a couple of months and is to set her down here until the yacht returns from Borneo and the Philippines. She says she hopes it will be quiet here. Quiet! She hopes it will be quiet!"

ICED TEA.

How to Make and Serve This Refreshing Summer Drink.

However the doctors and health fearful may revile iced tea, it is bound to stay as long as thermometers are so unruly in summer. It is surprising, considering the amount of iced tea Americans consume, how rarely it is good.

The most scientific and supposedly healthful way to prepare it is to pour freshly brewed hot tea over a large lump of ice, then pour into glasses half filled with shaved ice.

More economical is it to make a small quantity of rather strong tea several hours before it is to be used, let it cool in the refrigerator and weaken to the desired consistency with iced water just before needed.

It is a mistake to think iced tea can be cooled by a few lumps in the pitcher. There must be either cracked or shaved ice in glasses to make it palatable.

Lemon is also better added before the meal than at it. The usual way is to pass a section of lemon to each guest. Far better is the taste if both lemon and sugar are mixed with the tea when the iced water is added. Better yet is it to adopt the Russian plan of grating the rind of a lemon and pouring hot tea over it.

If lemon is passed, as it may have to be when some of the family do not like it, cut into lengthwise sections rather than thin rounds and pass in addition a small glass pitcher filled with extra lemon juice.

Mint leaves or lemon verbena added to iced tea, besides the lemon, gives a delicious flavor. It is also good with a little ginger syrup or a few drops of rum.

One hostess on gala occasions serves her iced tea poured cold over lemon, orange or pineapple sherbet. This is served in a punch bowl, and each guest fills her tall glass with the mixture. In this case cracked ice is not used.

The thinner and more slender an iced tea glass is the more refreshing it tastes. It should be stood on a glass saucer or tumbler coaster. If possible use long handled spoons.

Getting on In Years.

"Oh!" gasped the beautiful woman as she fell back, clutching at her heart and permitting the telegram to flutter to the floor.

Her fashionable guests rushed forward, crying:

"What is it? Has your husband met with an accident?"

"No—no," she moaned. "It is from my son-in-law. I am a grandmother."—Chicago Record-Herald.

"Gosh," I guess those city folks meant what they said when they told us that they came up here to get a good rest."

"They're taking it easy, eh?"

"Taking it easy! I should say they are. Would you believe it, not a one of 'em has got out of bed before 9 o'clock any morning since they've been here."—Detroit Free Press.

A CHILD'S IMPRESSIONS OF DEATH.

The sympathy of his tone and his kind gaze were too much for me. I wept. "It isn't just that he is dead," I sobbed. "But he's only a bird, he'll never live again and I can't have him any more, ever." It was the finality of it that broke my heart.

Uncle Dan sat hastily down on a sawhorse, and drew me gently between his knees. "How do you know you a'int goin' to have him again, Elly?" he asked.

"The Bible says so," sobbed I, "because he's got no soul."

Uncle Dan hesitated. He was an orthodox Presbyterian, but the sight of a little crying girl was unendurable. "No," he said tenderly, "the Bible don't say that. It don't say what becomes of birds and animals when they die. We know the Lord made 'em but what he does with 'em when he takes 'em he hasn't told."

A ray of hope came to me and I listened breathlessly. Would he go on?

Uncle Dan glanced down at that little golden morsel in the handkerchief box, once so full of love and song, and then he looked at me. He went on slowly:

"Judge was a good little bird an' I reckon you'll have him again." He wiped my eyes with his big handkerchief. "If I was you," he went on, "I'd take Judge home now and give him a real nice funeral." An inspiration struck him. "Look-a-here, I'll give you a tombstone for him."

We went out to the marble yard hand in hand, and there on a workbench lay a little block of white marble about half the size of a brick. On it Uncle Dan ordered to be chiseled, a hand with the index finger pointing upward. "There!" he exclaimed triumphantly, "How is that for a tombstone?"

I could scarcely believe my ears as this lovely symbol was bestowed on me. I ran home tombstone in one hand, casket in the other, and showed them to Mother.

"Now," said I, "I should like to be alone for awhile. I am going to have a funeral."

Mother understood. "I'll see that you are not interrupted," said she.

I conducted the obsequies. "Now I lay me down to sleep," was the prayer, and "There is a Happy Land," was the hymn. When all was finished I patted the earth down tenderly upon the little grave and erected the tombstone. Then I went into the house content, though very weary with my emotions.

How to Remove Lint From Mahogany.

When pieces of felt are pasted to the bottom of ornaments that are to stand on a polished surface care must be taken that the surface is not damp or the varnish fresh or the lint from the felt will stick to the wood and be worse than the scratch. This happens quite often in the slides of old mahogany desks. The unsightly mark on the top can only be removed by scraping gently with a piece of fine sandpaper and then rubbing up with sweet oil and vinegar. Do not scrape hard or the varnish will be scored and the surface of the mahogany be ruined.

How to Restore Chamois Skins.

An excellent way to restore chamois skins that have become stiff and soiled is to rub them through a strong solution of cold water and household ammonia, later rinsing thoroughly in clear cold water to soften. Pin to the line to dry in the sun and then rub through the hand slightly.

The Call of the Air.

When the woodlands are folded in opaline mist
And the clouds are of mother-of-pearl
Then I long to go up in my swift aeroplane
With propeller blades madly awhirl
I yearn to ascend to the azure above,
Like a bird, swooping hither and yon,
Rising up with delight to a star people height,
Coasting down on a beam of the sun.
Oh, what joy to look down on the tower and the town,
The field and the river below,
The first glinting gold of the morn to behold
Or the last of the evening's red glow;
To float like a boat to the planets remote,
By moonlight along in the sky,
With the wind out of space blowing cool in my face—
But the blamed old machine will not fly!

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction Sale

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars work of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised; these are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction sales write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising has done.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

Streaky Butter.

Streaky or mottled butter may be caused by the salt or it may be due to the working of the butter. The salt is so evenly diffused in the finest kind of butter that, as is shown by a microscope, every grain is surrounded by a film of clear and transparent brine, which points out the necessity of avoiding the overworking of the butter before the salt is added. In the first working every particle of the milk should be got rid of, but enough clear water should be left to dissolve every grain of salt in twelve hours before the next working. If this is done there will be but little danger of streakiness in the butter. Just to get the best results the salt should be very finely ground.

Origin of the Cherry Tree.

As a cultivated fruit the cherry is of eastern origin. The first garden cherries, as well as the name, have come from an old Greek town on the southern shores of the Black sea. The name of the colony was Cerasos, and the inhabitants cultivated the cherry. So in Greek the cherry became cerasos, in Latin cerasus, in French cerise, in English cherry. Pliny relates that the Roman General Lucullus, conqueror of the great Mithridates, brought the cherry from Cerasos to Rome. A tree laden with fruit is said to have adorned his triumphal procession. In the course of the next 120 years the culture of the cherry had spread far and wide and reached even remote Britain. —London Globe.

THE DOCTOR'S QUESTION

Some Advice Against the Use of Harsh Purgatives and Physics.

A doctor's first question when consulted by a patient is, "Are your bowels regular?" He knows that 98 per cent of illness is attended with inactive bowels and torpid liver. This condition poisons the system with waste matter and causes accumulation of gases which must be removed through the bowels before health can be restored.

Salts, ordinary pills and cathartics may be truly likened to dynamite. Through their harsh, irritating action they force a passage through the bowels, causing pain and damage to the delicate intestinal structure which weakens the whole system, and at best only produces temporary relief. The repeated use of such treatments causes chronic irritation of the stomach and bowels, dries and hardens their tissues, deadens their nerves, stiffens their muscles and generally brings about an injurious habit which sometimes has almost, if not fatal results.

We have a pleasant and safe remedy for constipation and bowel disorders in general. We are so certain of its great curative value that we promise to return the purchaser's money in every case where it fails to produce entire satisfaction. This remedy is called Rexall Orderlies. We urge you to try them at our entire risk.

Rexall Orderlies are eaten like candy, they act quietly and have a soothing, strengthening, healing, regulative influence on the entire intestinal tract. They do not purge, gripe, cause nausea, flatulence, excessive looseness, diarrhoea or other annoying effects, and that they may be taken at any time without inconvenience.

Rexall Orderlies overcome the drugging habit and safely remedy constipation and associate ailments, whether acute or chronic, except in surgical cases. They are especially good for children, weak persons or old folks. Price 36 tablets 25 cents, and 12 tablets 10 cents. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store. A. B. Fleischer, Proprietor Ivy Drug store.

THE VETERINARY

The following is an old fashioned remedy for caked udder: Rub soft soap on the affected part until a lather is formed. Repeat several times or until the hardness disappears.

Destroying Cattle Ticks.

Where ticks are found on cattle a sure way to get rid of them is to go over the cattle with a sponge well moistened with crude petroleum. Repeat when necessary until all ticks are destroyed.

Potatoes For Worms.

If horses or colts have worms try feeding them raw potatoes thinly sliced. You will probably have to mix the potatoes in with the grain at first to get the horses to eat them. A few raw potatoes each week are good for a horse at any time.

Caring For Nail Wounds.

When a horse picks up a nail be sure to cut out a funnel shaped cavity as deep as the wound and make it bleed all it possibly will. Then use a wash of water that is strongly scented with carbolic acid several times and keep the foot packed with oakum.

Cause of Reddish Milk.

Bloody or reddish milk may be caused by blows on the udder or by inflammation from other causes and is not uncommon in summer, when a sudden accession of rich food may induce local congestion, with increased flow of milk. Law says, "If the discolored milk is caused by congestion a saline laxative, followed with nitre, a restricted diet and frequent bathing of the udder with very cold water is useful."—Dr. Michener in Farm Journal.

HAS ANNOUNCED HIS CANDIDACY

Chase S. Osborn will be Candidate for Governor

OSBORN, HARMONY AND A NEW DEAL

Will be the Campaign Slogan of His Friends.

Splendidly Equipped for the Position—Will Carry the Upper Peninsula Solid—Has Admirers all Over State.

Renewed pressure from friends in all sections of the state has culminated in a definite announcement of the candidacy of Chase S. Osborn for the republican nomination for governor.

"After careful consideration of the situation," said Mr. Osborn, "I have come to feel that some expression of my attitude is due my friends who have so warmly urged my candidacy for the governorship. Several months ago when evidence of this sentiment first was given publicity I declared my determination to await events and under no circumstances to yield to importunity unless convinced of the existence of a real popular demand that I become a candidate. Recent developments have demonstrated to my satisfaction the existence of such a demand, so widespread and insistent as to constitute an appeal to my sense of duty as a citizen far more than to any feeling of personal ambition.

"During the progress of the campaign I shall make clear the principles which will control me, and the policies I shall endeavor to pursue, should the people of Michigan honor me with election to the governorship."

"Osborn, Harmony and a New Deal," is the slogan of the Osborn campaign committee, which is rapidly forming in the Twelfth district, to foster and promote the Osborn candidacy. The goal to which it will work is a 25,000 majority for its favorite son in the upper peninsula alone. That the Osborn candidacy will sweep the peninsula from the Montreal to the Straits in a storm of popular enthusiasm is already evident. The district feels that for the first time in its history an excellent opportunity is offered to place an upper peninsula man in the governor's chair. It is also felt that such an outcome would do much to closely cement the two peninsulas in that bond of sympathy and understanding which is essential to the public welfare of the state.

Not only will Mr. Osborn come down to the straits with a tremendous vote, but his friends are legion all over the state. He has won the admiration of the people by his public services, and they will all fall in line with the slogan of "Osborn, Harmony and a New Deal."

Chase S. Osborn was a candidate for the nomination for governor ten years ago. Since then he has devoted himself to business and a study of governmental and administrative questions which has taken him into all quarters of the civilized world, giving him an expert knowledge of political matters which is shared by few public men in the country. His ability as a public speaker is widely recognized, and in addition, he is possessed of an attractive, magnetic personality which wins friends for him on every hand. He has declared his intention of making an aggressive, energetic campaign and will in all probability be heard by the great majority of the citizens of the state before the campaign ends.

TRAVERSE WON SATURDAY'S GAME

Charlevoix Put up a Game Fight All Through

PADDOCK AND CAREY WERE THE STARS

Charlevoix Players Showed Great Improvement in Form

November 20 They Will Meet Traverse City On Home Grounds and are Confident of Victory

Charlevoix boys met defeat at Traverse City in the game Saturday, but put up a game fight against a school that has over 350 to select a team from. The general opinion is that the boys showed great improvement, and they are confident of victory when they meet Traverse, on the home grounds, November 20. The Traverse City Eagle gives the following story of the game:

The choice of goals fell to Charlevoix and the local boys in face of a strong north wind kicked off to the visitors. Then there followed a series of line bucks and scrimmages, such as the football fans had failed to see so far this season. The locals were steadily surging toward Charlevoix's goal, when a punt by Hansnn went out of bounds. This unlucky play penalized the locals and the ball was brought back from the place of punting and placed in Charlevoix's possession. They choose a scrimmage play, and Paddock broke through the local boys for a gain of 20 yards. Then followed steady gains for Charlevoix. On nearing the T. C. goal, Charlevoix failed to make good in their three downs and the ball went to Traverse. Traverse then tried her luck at punting, but Wallace of the Charlevoix boys secured the punt and made a good gain of about 20 yards. Hansen was then given the pigskin on a forward pass and he carried the ball dangerously near to Charlevoix's goal. It was at this stage of the game that Carey of Charlevoix, showed his form in tacking, and the way he tore through Traverse was wonderful. The ball was in possession of the local boys and with but one more down in which to make six yards, they redoubled their efforts but to no avail. Charlevoix was adamant and did not give an inch. So near to a touchdown was Traverse that the fans were nearly wild when the locals failed to make a touchdown. With the ball in their possession Charlevoix began to steadily force their way toward Traverse City's goal. But a twenty minute half must come to an end, and with both teams in about the center of the field struggling hard to outdo the other, the umpire called time, and the first half closed with no score on either side.

Second Half.

Charlevoix punted to Traverse and the punt was returned. Then followed a series of punting back and forth with neither side gaining any marked advantage. On a punt by the locals Hull of Charlevoix, secured the ball for a 30-yard gain. In the scrimmage which followed, Hansen made repeated line smashes. At times he would leave his interference, but regardless of this he always made good. The ball was again passed to Hansen on a forward pass and taking his opportunity he made a gain of 30 yards. This gain of Hansen's for 30 yards, combined with a line smash by Holliday for 10 yards brought the locals near Charlevoix's goal. Hat the ball went to Charlevoix and it looked as if the locals were to suffer the same fate as in the first half, but the Charlevoix, boys failed to make good, and the ball was once more in possession of the locals. Summing up all their strength in a final effort, the boys sent Hal Holiday through the line for the first touchdown to the credit of the T. C. boys. Hansen kicked goal. Our boys then kicked to Charlevoix, and Stan Snyder made a fine run which brought the locals dangerously near to the Charlevoix goal. Then followed a number of plays which showed up both teams in good form. But with the ball in their possession T. C. handed the pigskin, Lewis Ludka the ball and he took it through Charlevoix for the second touchdown credited to Traverse.

It would be difficult to pick the stars of Traverse City's team, as all of the boys showed up in good form, but Paddock and Carey were easily the stars for Charlevoix.

Umpire, Kehoe; field judge, Jay Smith; linesman, Highbee; referee, Heighes; timekeepers, Prof. Wilson of Charlevoix and K. Uulor.

SUCCESSFUL MEETING

Of Charlevoix Pomona Grange Held Thursday.

Fruit Growing Principal Subject for Discussion—Will Meet November 4.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange met with Pine Lake Grange Thursday. Although it was a very stormy day a good crowd was present.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Ward, immediately after dinner. Brother Newville, master of Pine Lake Grange, welcomed the visitors, the response being made by William Mears, acting as overseer of Pomona. Owing to the absence of State Master Hull, who was compelled to attend to business for the State Dairy and Food Department, the time was taken up with a discussion of fruit growing, which was interesting at all times, the farmers of Charlevoix county having awakened to the importance of the industry. The need of more spraying and cultivation was brought out in the discussion, also the setting out of less varieties which would mean a better market. Worthy Master Ward explained the arrangements which had been made for the entertainment of Charlevoix patrons, Charlevoix Day at the State Grange, which was fixed for Thursday, December 15. While he was unable to state definitely what the fare would be, a good rate was assured.

After supper the reports of committees was taken up. The committee on subordinate granges reported that the Deer Lake Grange was the banner grange in the county although Ironton had made the largest growth.

On good of the order, the next meeting was fixed with Peninsula Grange, Thursday, November 4. All Granges were urged to appoint correspondents for the COURIER, the grange department of which was highly indorsed. It was also recommended that a banner be purchased to use on the Traverse City trip. Brother John Hiller and wife, of Peninsula Grange were elected Pomona delegates to the State Grange and the degree of Pomona was conferred on a class of six. All who were present who had not previously taken the degree. Sister Sayles and Brother Korthase furnished recitations and music, music was also furnished by Pine Lake Grange.

During the business sessions the discussions were very animated at all times showing the lively interest taken by the members in the progress of the order. The next meeting at Peninsula will be the most important one of the year and every patron should plan to be present. All who have not been invested with the degree of Pomona should present their applications as this will be probably the last chance for Charlevoix patrons to receive the degree in full form before the meeting of the State Grange and the degree must be had if one wishes to enjoy all the privileges of the State Grange.

Already some of the exhibits which will be made by this county, are at Traverse City. Headquarters have been engaged and everything indicates that Charlevoix county will be well advertised at the state meeting.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS

George Rowe Says the Cold Spell Will Be Worth

To Western Michigan in Checking the Growth of Insect Pests of Fruit Trees

George E Rowe in an interview last week said:

"It is my sincere opinion that this cold spell will be worth to Western Michigan fully one million dollars."

"This check which it will impose on the growth of insect pests will be worth all of that. You see the warm weather that we have had has been wonderfully favorable to the propagation of pests. These are chiefly the oyster louse and the San Jose scale pests so minute as to be barely visible to the naked eye."

"They live on the bark of trees, sucking the sap and in a very few years destroying the trees by thus bleeding them. Spraying is not a complete prevention as the only way to destroy these scale pests is smother them, which is done with a sulphur preparation. But they spread in the woods and come back again normally."

"They have a power of multiplication past human conception. Three generations, all averaging half females, will give hundreds of millions from a single parent. Fortunately the female dies after propagating one generation. Now this cold weather has caught the young brood just at the right time. They do not fly, but are carried on the feet of birds and other insects."

Mr. Rowe has spent his life as a practical horticulturist and now raises fruit on 80 acres of land half a mile from Grand Rapids. He is an accredited lecturer of the United States department of agriculture and has long been considered one of the chief authorities on fruit in this state. He has had charge of the work of securing exhibits of Michigan for several national expositions, and it is no new matter to him to take hold of such a great work as that he is now actively engaged in so that this district may be well represented with products at the land and irrigation congress to be held in Chicago next month.

Mr. Rowe tells convincingly of the development of the canning and preserving industry in Western Michigan, and points out how it is steadily reaching northward because the finest quality is produced in the northern counties.

SUPERVISOR'S WORK IS FINISHED

The October Session Lasted Only One Week

1 PER CENT LEVIED FOR COUNTY TAX

A. E. Cross Elected Superintendent of the Poor.

Frank Pearson Re-Elected—Butler and DeVoe Elected School Examiners—Other Important Business.

The supervisors finished their work and returned home Saturday. As we went to press last week the only business of importance which had been transacted was the voting of the usual amount to advance the agricultural interests of the county, one hundred dollars of which went to the Pomona grange committee for the purpose of making an exhibit at the meeting of the state grange, and the balance to the Agricultural society.

The committee on the Ironton ferry reported that the ferry was operated 281 days last year, at an expense of $758.08, one-third of which is paid by Eveline township.

The Soldiers' Relief Commission reported a total expenditure of $181.23, relief having been given to twenty persons during the year.

A. E. Cross of East Jordan, was elected Superintendent of the Poor, full term, to succeed J. W. Rogers, and Frank Pearson of Boyne Falls, was elected as Superintendent of the Poor, for the term of two years, to succeed himself.

For members of the Board of School Examiners, L. A. Butler of Boyne City, was elected for the full term and I. M. DeVoe of Charlevoix, for one year.

The printing was awarded to the Boyne Citizen for $75.00.

The Superintendents of the Poor reported that during the year relief had been granted to one hundred and forty persons, of which 33 had been cared for at the county farm. The farm had been repaired at a cost of $1,401.08. The following amounts had been paid the various townships for the relief of the poor:

Bay	81 50
Boyne Valley	100 30
Charlevoix	234 61
Chandler	69 73
Eveline	151 88
Evangeline	10 00
Hudson	174 26
Hayes	837 10
Melrose	67 23
St. James	260 97
Peaine	720 81
South Arm	274 82
Wilson	144 84
City of Charlevoix	217 78
Boyne City	536 90
Total	$3,722 66

The total valuation of the county as equalized was fixed at $6,139,072 and a tax of one per cent was levied which is estimated will pay off $30,000 indebtedness.

The amounts of tax to be paid by the nearby townships, follows:

	Town	State	County
Charlevoix	$2,016.25	$429.88	$1,273.00
Eveline	3,236.71	507.27	2,137.05
Hayes	2,475.72	779.50	2,307.90
Marion	2,851.30	720.42	2,187.55
Norwood	1,750.00	510.03	1,083.39
City of Charlevoix	3,825.02		12,117.95

All the banks in the county except the People's Bank of Boyne City, were designated as county depositories and filed their bonds as require by law.

Considerable credit is due the board for finishing their work in so short a time, which they were enabled to do by our county officials being ready to report without holding up any of the committees. Clerk Payton had the necessary records and blanks ready and all made out. Hustle was the watchword on everybody's part.

ACTUAL STARVATION

A. B. Fleischer Gives Facts Regarding Dyspepsia

Although indigestion and dyspepsia are so prevalent, most people do not thoroughly understand their cause and how to obtain relief. There is no reason why people should not eat anything they desire if they will only chew it carefully and thoroughly. Many actually starve themselves into sickness through fear of eating every good looking, good smelling and good tasting food, because it does not agree with them.

Dieting cannot cure dyspepsia. If we refuse every article of food that disagrees with us, before long we have nothing left, and find ourselves chronic dyspeptics.

We are so confident that we can furnish relief for indigestion, and dyspepsia that we promise to supply the medicine free of all cost to everyone who uses it according to directions, who is not perfectly satisfied with the results. We exact no promises and put no one under any obligation whatever. Surely nothing could be fairer. We are located right here where you live, and our reputation should be sufficient assurances of the genuiness of our offer.

We want everyone who is troubled with indigestion or dyspepsia in any form to come to our store and get a box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. Take them home and give them a reasonable trial, according to directions. They are very pleasant to take; they soothe the irritable stomach, strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, promote a healthy and natural bowel action, almost immediately relieve nausea and stomach irritation, produce healthy digestion and assimilation, and promote nutrition.

A 25-cent package of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets furnishes 15 days' treatment. In ordinary cases this is sufficiet to produce complete relief. In more chronic cases, a longer treatment, of course, is necessary, and depends upon the severity of the trouble. For such cases we have two larger sizes, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store,—The Rexall Store. A. B. Fleischer, Ivy Drug Store.

It is a fine thing that women as a class are as religiously inclined as they are, but it would be still better if the men were held accountable for about half the piety in the home and the matter not left as one sided as it is at present.

Many attach importance to the badger sign in the location of a place for a well, the theory being that this homely animal has a water instinct which causes him to dig his burrows in low places where it is but a few feet to water.

A small colony of Mormons in the desert country south of Tucson, Ariz. dry farmed 200 acres in beans last year and sold the crop for $13,000. Beats all what can be accomplished when thrift and enterprise are hitched up under the same neck yoke.

May 11 best grade Colorado lambs in fleece brought $9.50 on the Chicago market, the highest price on record up to that date. Native lambs in good condition brought $8 to $8.10. These prices make the sheep business look like a pretty safe and satisfactory proposition.

The yield of wheat in Russia for twenty years past has been eight and one-fourth bushels per acre, the land lying fallow every third year and a famine appearing about once every five. It is little wonder in the face of this showing that anarchy and misery run riot in the czar's domain.

Last year Canada had 500,000 acres of land devoted to the growing of potatoes, which produced a total of 71,511,000 bushels, or an average of 142 bushels per acre. The average market price was 50 cents a bushel. The above yield is about twice per acre that reported for the same period in the United States.

A good many Wisconsin farmers had their eyes opened on the tuberculosis question when attending the short course classes at Madison the past winter. Not only was the subject of tuberculosis discussed, but animals shown to be affected with the disease by the tuberculin test were slaughtered before the class and the effects of the disease demonstrated.

Those farmers who rather incline to the dual purpose cow will read with satisfaction and interest of the record recently completed by the registered Shorthorn cow Lulu, owned by the Missouri Agricultural college. Her showing for a week was 13 pounds of butter. For a month 77.8 pounds and for a full year 695.6 pounds. Her milk yield for the year was 12,341 pounds, testing 4.17 per cent butter fat.

An excellent paint or wash for fruit tree trunks is made from the following: One peck of stone lime slaked in a quantity of water, one quart of crude carbolic acid, four pounds of sulphur, half a gallon of pine tar. The last named ingredient should be added while the lime-water is hot, so that the tar will dissolve more readily. The whole should be stirred thoroughly and enough water added to give the mixture the right consistency for spreading.

The wholesome effect of an hour's work on lawn, garden or wood pile or in a brisk walk in the way of helping a fellow to "let down" from a condition of nervous tension and irritability induced by confining office work, tobacco smoke and bad air can hardly be measured. Failure to take advantage of this simple restorative has shortened life, bred unhappiness and furnished more grist for divorce mills than almost any influence that can be mentioned.

The brown tailed moth is an insect pest that has worked havoc to vegetation in the limited areas in which it has appeared and gives promise of being a national horticultural curse unless the most stringent measures are taken to keep it in check. Once it appears in a locality it strips orchard, shade and forest trees of every vestige of foliage. To handle the problem as it should be met not only should most stringent laws be passed, but there should be the fullest co-operation possible between federal and state authorities.

In sections where heavy windstorms are likely to occur at harvest time a timber belt on the windward side of the orchard often saves heavy loss from windfalls as the fruit approaches maturity. Where the orchard has not been favorably located with reference to such timber protection a shelter belt can be grown in a few years. Quick growing varieties such as the cottonwood and box elder will answer this purpose nicely, while the Scotch or white pine may be set outside the deciduous varieties to give effective protection near the ground. In the writer's own orchard such windbreak has meant a saving of hundreds of dollars almost every year as a result of the protection afforded.

FRUIT JUICES VERSUS DOPE.

Humanity would be stronger and have a much smaller annual doctor's bill if it would swill down less dope—quinine, bromo seltzer and booze concoctions disguised under pious, soothing and high sounding names—and eat more nature distilled fruit juices, grapefruit for malaria, prunes and figs for costiveness, cranberries for slow liver, lemon juice in hot water for nausea and biliousness, with apples, oranges, pears, peaches and the rest as aids to digestion, blood purifiers and for the general health.

If one has a brush patch which he wants cleaned up nothing will do the job more quickly and thoroughly than a bunch of Angora goats. They are a veritable scourge in the horticultural world.

An Illinois poultry breeder has five White Wyandotte hens which have laid 1,223 eggs in one year, or an average of 223.4 each. The oldest hen in the flock, the mother of the other four, laid 253 eggs in eleven months.

It is a puzzler how so many kids survive the August period of dog day sonks in swimming holes, green hazel nuts and half grown apples, but it seems that a vast majority of them do and are no worse for the ordeal.

Bugs doped with arsenic are said to die of starvation. The important consideration, whatever the diagnosis, is that an effective kink is put in their digestive apparatuses, which keeps them from a further chewing of trees, fruits and vegetables.

A Fresno county (Cal.) poultryman has a hen—breed not stated—which has laid 244 eggs in eleven months, only seven less than the world's record. At prevailing prices the eggs this hen laid were worth about $6. The cost of keeping was $1.44, leaving a net profit of $4.56.

Where limbs exceeding an inch in diameter are cut from the orchard trees the wound should be painted over with white lead and oil, colored with lampblack if desired, which will keep the wood from checking and becoming a source of infection for the rot fungus.

Alfalfa meal—ground alfalfa hay—contains about 14 per cent of protein, 2 per cent of sap, 25 per cent of crude fiber and 7 per cent of ash. It is because of the above ingredients that it is worth, pound for pound, as much as bran and sells for about the same price on the market.

IT'S QUALITY THAT COUNTS

When buying that fence for your farm don't be misled into getting a poor fence because it costs a little less per rod. You'll be sick of your bargain by the end of the first season. You'll wish you had considered quality instead of price.

PEERLESS WOVEN WIRE FENCE

is built to stand many seasons of hard usage. Made of hard steel galvanized wire that will not rust out and break.

The cross-bars are all of one piece, and give upright stability to the fence. CHAPTER X—Continued.

"I say, Deppingham, you can take her out walking and pick up a crownful of fresh rubies every day or so," said Browne.

"Hang it all, Browne, I'm afraid to pluck a violet these days. Every time I stoop over I feel that somebody's going to take a shot at me. I wonder why the beggars select me to shoot at. They're not always popping away at you, Browne. Why is it?"

"It's all right so long as they don't kill you," was Browne's consoling remark.

"By Jove!" said Deppingham, starting up with a look of horror in his eyes, sudden comprehension rushing down upon him. "I wonder if they think I am you, Browne! Horrible!"

The enemy's office hours were from 3 to 5 in the afternoon. Twice a week Miss Pelham came down from the chateau in a gayly-bedecked jinrikisha to sit opposite to him in his stuffy corner of the banking house, his desk between them, her notebook trembling with propinquity. Mr. Britt generously lent the pert lady to the enemy in exchange for what he catalogued as "happy days."

Miss Pelham made it a point to look as fascinating as possible on the occasion of these interesting trips into the enemy's territory.

The enemy, doing his duty by his clients with a determination that seemed incontestable, was the last to realize that an intrigue was shaping itself to combat his endeavors. Von Blitz, openly his friend and ally, despite their sad encounter, was the thorn which pricked the natives into a state of uneasiness and doubt as to their agent's sincerity.

They began to believe that no good could come out of the daily meetings of the three lawyers.

It was Von Blitz who told the leading men of the island that their wives—the Persians, the Circassians, the Egyptians and the Turkish houris—were in love with the tall stranger. It was he who advised them to observe the actions, to study the moods of their women.

The German knew the condition of affairs in his own household. His overthrow at the hands of the American had cost him more than physical ignominy; his wives openly expressed an admiration for their champion. Every eye in Japat was upon him; every hand was turning against him.

It was Miss Pelham who finally took it upon herself to warn the lonely American. The look of surprise and disgust that came into his face brought her up sharply.

"Miss Pelham," he said coldly, "will you be kind enough to carry my condolences to the ladies at court and say that I recommend reading as an antidote for the poison which idleness produces. Neither my home nor my barroom is open to ladies. If you don't mind we'll go on with this report."

Miss Pelham flushed and looked very uncomfortable.

"You're wrong about Lady Deppingham and Mrs. Browne," she began hurriedly. "They've never said anything mean about you. It was just my miserable way of putting it. The talk comes from the Islanders. Mr. Bowles has told Mr. Britt and Mr. Saunders. He thinks Von Blitz is working against you, and he is sure that all of the men are furiously jealous."

"Perhaps there is something in what you say. I'm grateful to you for preparing me." It had suddenly come to mind that the night before he had seen a man skulking in the vicinity of the bungalow.

"I just thought I'd tell you," murmured Miss Pelham nervously. "I—we don't want to see you get into trouble—none of us."

"Thank you." After a long pause he went on, lowering his voice: "Miss Pelham, I have had a hard time here in more ways than I care to speak of. It may interest you to know that I had decided to resign next month and go home. I'm a living man, and a living man objects to a living death. But I've changed my mind. I'll stick my time out. I've got three months longer to stay, and I'll stay. If Von Blitz thinks he can drive me out, he's mistaken. I'll be here after you and your friends up there have sailed away, Miss Pelham—God bless you, you're all white—and I'll be here when Von Blitz and his wives are dancing to the tunes I play. Now let's get back to work. If Von Blitz is working in the dark, I'll compel him to show his hand. And, Miss Pelham," he concluded very slowly, "I'll promise to use a club, if necessary, to drive the Persian ladies away. So please rest easy on my account."

The next morning the town hustled with a new excitement. A trim, beautiful yacht, flying strange colors, steamed into the little harbor of Arntt. Every one knew that the yacht brought the princess who was to visit her ladyship.

The enemy came down from his bungalow, attracted by the unusual and inspiring spectacle of a ship at anchor. A line of anxiety marked his brow. Two figures had watched his windows all night long, sinister shadows that always met his eye when it penetrated the gloom of the moonlit forest.

Lord and Lady Deppingham were on the pier before him. Excitement and joy illumined her face. Her eyes were sparkling with anticipation. He could almost see that she trembled in her eagerness. He came quite close to them before they saw him. Exhilaration no doubt was responsible for the very agreeable smile of recognition that she bestowed upon him. The enemy could do no less than go to them with his pleasantest acknowledgment. His rugged face relaxed into a most charming, winsome smile, half diffident, half assured.

He passed among the wives of his clients without so much as a sign of recognition, coolly indifferent to the admiring glances that sought his face. The dark, languorous eyes that flashed eager admiration a moment before now turned sullen with disappointment. He had ignored their owners.

"I have heard that you expect a visitor," said the enemy in his most agreeable manner.

"Won't you go aboard with us?" asked Deppingham, at a loss for anything better to say. The enemy shook his head and smiled.

"You are very good, but I believe my place is here."

"The princess is to be with me for a month. We expect more sunshine than ever at the chateau," ventured her ladyship.

"I sincerely hope you may be disappointed," said he commiseratingly, fanning himself with his hat. She laughed and understood, but Deppingham was halfway out to the yacht before it became clear to him that the enemy hoped literally, not figuratively.

The enemy sauntered back to the American bar, lonelier than ever before in his life. He now knew what it was that he had missed more than all else—woman.

Britt and Saunders were waiting for him under the awning outside.

"Hello!" called Britt. "We saw you down there, but couldn't get near. By ginger, old man, I had no idea your Persians were so beautiful. They are oriental gems of"—

"My Persians? What the devil do you mean, Britt? Come in and sit down; I want to talk to you fellows. See here, this talk about these women has got to be stopped. It's dangerous for you, and it's dangerous for me. It is so full of peril that I don't care to look at them, handsome as you say they are. Do you know what I was thinking of as I came over here after leaving one of the most charming of women—your Lady Deppingham? I was thinking what a wretched famine there is in women. I'm speaking of women like Lady Deppingham and Mrs. Browne, neither of whom I know, and yet I've known them all my life—the kind of women we love, not the kind we despise or pity. Don't you see? I'm hungry for the very sight of a woman."

"You see Miss Pelham often enough," said Saunders surlily. The enemy was making a pitcher of lemonade.

"My dear Saunders, you are quite right. I do see Miss Pelham often enough. In my present frame of mind I'd fall desperately in love with her if I saw her oftener." Saunders blinked and glared at him through his pale eyes.

"My word!" he said. Then he got up abruptly and stalked out of the room. Britt laughed immoderately.

"He's a lucky dog," reflected the enemy. "You see, he loves her, Britt—he loves little Miss Pelham. Do you know what that means? It means everything is worth while. Hello! Here he is back! Come in, Saunders. Here's your lemo!"

Saunders was excited. He stopped in the doorway, but looked over his shoulder into the street.

"Come along!" he exclaimed. "They are going up to the chateau—the princess and her party. My word, she's ripping!"

At the corner they stopped to await the procession of palanquins and jinrikishas which had started from the pier. The smart English victoria from the chateau, drawn by Wyckholme's thoroughbreds, was coming on in advance of the foot brigade. In the rear seat of the victoria sat Lady Deppingham and one who evidently was the princess. Opposite to them sat two older but no less smart looking women.

"A gala day in Aratat," observed the stubby Mr. Britt. "We are to have the whole party overnight up at the chateau. Hello! By thunder, old man, she's—she's speaking to you!" He turned in astonishment to look at his companion's face.

The enemy was staring, transfixed, at the young woman in white who sat beside Lady Deppingham. He seemed paralyzed for the moment. Then his helmet came off with a rush; a dazed smile of recognition lighted his face. The very pretty young woman in the white hat was leaning forward and smiling at him, a startled, uncertain look in her eyes. Lady Deppingham was glancing open mouthed from one to the other.

"I must be dreaming," murmured the enemy.

Britt took him by the arm. "Do you know her?" he asked. The enemy turned upon him with a radiant gleam in his once somber, disconsolate eyes.

"Do you think I'd be grinning at her like a fool if I didn't? Why the dickens didn't you tell me that it was the Princess Genevra of Rapp-Thorberg who was coming?"

His helmet came off with a rush; a dazed smile of recognition lighted his face.

CHAPTER XI.

CHASE PERFORMS A MIRACLE.

HOLLINGSWORTH CHASE now felt that he was on neutral ground with the Princess Genevra. His strange connection with the Skaggs will case is easily explained. After leaving Thorberg he went directly to Paris; thence, after ten days, to London, where he hoped to get on as a staff correspondent for one of the big dailies. One day at the Savage club he listened to a recital of the amazing conditions which attended the execution of Skaggs' will. He had shot wild game in South Africa with Sir John Brodney, chief counselor for the Islanders, and when Sir John suddenly proposed that he go out to Japat as the firm's representative he leaped at the chance.

In truth Basula was more than glad to have the services of an American. He had heard Wyckholme talk of the manner in which civil causes were tried in the United States, and he felt that one Yankee on the scene was worth ten Englishmen at home.

The good looking Mr. Chase, writhing under the dread of exposure as an international jackass, welcomed the opportunity to get as far away from civilization as possible. He knew that the Prince Karl story would not lie dormant; but he could not banish the fair face of the Princess Genevra from his thoughts during the long voyage, nor would it be stretching the point to say that his day dreams were of her as he sat and smoked in his bungalow porch.

Before Chase left London Sir John Brodney bluntly cautioned him against the dangers that lurked in Lady Deppingham's eyes.

"She won't leave you a peg to stand on, Chase, if you seek an encounter," he said. "She's pretty and she's clever, and she's made fools of better men than you, my boy. I don't say she's a bad lot, because she's too smart for that. Remember, my boy, you are going out there to offset, not to beset, Lady Deppingham."

Chase was not in love with the proud Princess Genevra. He denied that to himself a hundred times a day as he sat in his bungalow and smoked the situation over.

He had proved to himself quite beyond a doubt that he was not in love, when, like a bolt from a clear sky, she stepped out of the oblivion into which he had cast her to smile upon him without warning. It was most unfair. Her smile had been one of the most difficult obstacles to overcome in the effort to return a fair and final verdict.

Could anything be more miraculous than that she should come to the island of Islat, unless, possibly, that he should be there when she came? She was there for him to look upon and love and lose, just as he had dreamed all those months. It mattered little that she was now the wife of Prince Karl of Brabetz. To him she was still the Princess Genevra of Rapp-Thorberg.

In his leather pocketbook lay the ever present reminder that she could be no more than a dream to him. It was the clipping from a Paris newspaper announcing that the Princess Genevra was to wed Prince Karl during the Christmas holidays.

He had seen the Christmas holidays come and go with the certain knowledge in his heart that they had given her to Brabetz as the most glorious present that man had ever received.

Now she was come to the island, and, so far as he had been able to see, there was no sign of the Prince Brabetz in attendance. Her uncle by marriage, an English nobleman of high degree, in gathering his friends for the long cruise evidently had left the prince out of his party, for what reason Chase could not imagine. To say that the omission was gratifying to the tall American would be too simple a statement. There is no telling to what heights his thoughts might have carried him on that sultry afternoon if they had not been harshly checked by the arrival of a messenger from the chateau. His blood leaped with anticipation.

Could it be possible? But, no, she would not be writing to him. What a ridiculous thought! His hopes fell flat as the note was put into his eager hand. It was from Britt.

Still he broke the seal with considerable eagerness. As he perused the somewhat lengthy message his disappointment gave way to a no uncertain form of excitement. With its conclusion he was on his feet, his eyes gleaming with enthusiasm.

"By George!" he exclaimed. "What luck! Things are coming my way with a vengeance. I'll do it this very night, thanks to Britt. And I must not forget Browne. Ah, what a consolation it is to know that there are Americans wherever one goes. Selim! Selim!" He was standing as straight as a corporal and his eyes were glistening with the fire of battle when Selim came up and forgot to salute, so great was his wonder at the transformation. "Get word to the men that I want every mother's son of 'em to attend a meeting in the market place tonight at 9. Very important, tell 'em. Tell Von Blitz that she's got to be there. I'm going to show him and my picturesque friend, Basula, that I am here to stay. And, Selim, tell that messenger to wait. There's an answer."

Long before 9 o'clock the men of Japat began to gather in the market and trading place. Hollingsworth Chase, attended by Selim, came down from his mountain retreat. He heard the sibilant hiss of the several Persians as he passed among them on the outskirts of the crowd. He observed the threatening attitude of the men who waited and watched. He saw the white, ugly face of Von Blitz quivering with triumph. He felt the breath of disaster upon his cheek. And yet he walked among them without fear, his head erect, his eyes defiant.

The market place was a large open tract in the extreme west end of the town, some distance removed from the business street and the pier. Through a break in the foothills the chateau was plainly discernible, the sea being obscured from view by the dense forest that crowned the cliffs.

Chase made his way boldly to the nearest platform, exchanging bows with the surprised Von Blitz and the saturnine Basula, who stood quite near. The men of Japat slowly drew close in as he mounted the platform. From where he stood looking out over those bronze faces he could pick out the scowling husbands who hated him because their wives hated them. Afar off stood the group of women who had inspired this hatred and distrust. Be-

SWEET SCENTED PILLOWS.

How to Prepare the Stuffing and Select the Covers.

In order to make sweet scented pillows first of all the pillow stuffing must be well dried. Lay the leaves or flowers in an airy shaded room and toss them about gently every day, that they shall not collect moisture and mold. When they are quite dry you are ready to stuff the pillow. Take enough raw cotton to fill one-half of the pillow, tear it in small pieces and lay it in a big pan and dry it out well in the oven. This makes a fluffy filling. Now mix the cotton with the dried flowers and leaves; fill up the cushion of ticking and sew it firmly. It is ready for the outer covering.

Of course, if you prefer it, you may make a pillow of hops or rose leaves or lavender alone, but it will not be so comfortable as the pillow that is partly baked cotton, and, since you want to put your head on it, why not make it comfortable? Hops must be used by themselves, and so must lavender. But one may make truly delicious blends by mixing dried lemon verbena, rose geranium, rose petals and clove pinks. Choose your rose petals from the old fashioned flat double pink roses; they are the sweetest sort.

Pine pillows have a refreshing woodsy perfume, and fern leaves dried have a delightful mysterious odor that makes one remember the belief of childhood that one could put fern seed in one's eyes and ever afterward would be able to see fairies. Clover makes sweet pillows, too, redolent of new mown hay. The common pink clover makes the sweetest sort, though white clover may be used.

As for the covers, choose something distinctive and individual. A little pillow of rose leaves and lemon verbena, covered with rose colored linen with a little rose bud stenciled on it, is most unusual and charming.

For a fern pillow choose a linen cover of dull green and embroider your own name in mercerized cotton exactly the same tone in one corner.

The cover for a pine pillow might well be of rough tan crash or linen with a stenciled pattern of green and brown on it, or else with a small monogram block letters embroidered in brown in one corner.

Fern leaf pillows should be covered with creamy linen, rather heavy in quality, with green fern leaves embroidered or stenciled upon it. Make the cover in the form of two squares considerably larger than the pillow and work long buttonholed eyelets through both, lacing them together over the pillow with a ribbon of dull green. At the corner where the ribbon ties slip two or three big green beads on loops and ends.

To cover pillows a cover of the popular Russian crash in cool gray would be appropriate, and if it is stenciled lightly with butterflies or dragon flies it will add to its daintiness, or it might be embroidered in small, flat squares in rose colored cotton.

The flower perfumed pillows will be found useful for the afternoon nap lounges in the hammock. Slip them under your head, and they will perfume your hair with just a touch of delicate fragrance.

If you are troubled with insomnia try the hop or the pine pillow—they will help you to sleep if nothing else will.

Protecting Horses From Flies.

To keep flies from horses take two or three small handfuls of green walnut leaves. Over them pour two or three quarts of soft cold water. Let this stand one night and pour the whole next morning into a kettle. Allow it to boil about fifteen minutes. When cold it will be ready to use. Nothing more is necessary than to saturate a sponge before starting out with the horse from the stable and with the hand go over those parts which are most affected.—Farm Journal.

Pensioned For Life.

"If you pull my hair again, Louise, I'll discharge you without a moment's notice!" snapped the lovely Sibyl Stevenson to her French maid, who was dressing her mistress' head.

"Miss Sibyl is very cross," suggested the maid in meek reply as she went on with her thankless task.

"Well, you'd be cross, too, if"—

"Shall I dress the hair high or low this morning, miss?" interrupted Louise.

"The ugliest way possible," said Sibyl sharply. "Make me the ugliest woman on the beach. Make me so ugly that no man will ever look at me. Do you understand?" she continued. "I hate men."

Louise went on making puffs and curls regardless of her mistress' directions. For a time nothing was said. Sibyl was decidedly moody, and it was the maid who again started the conversation.

"Miss Sibyl, what is a good looking glass?"

"Why, Louise, you are stupid not to know that. A good looking glass is a mirror which tells no lies. Now, with the men—they are not so responsible—they do not always tell the truth, but you can depend on a good looking glass to be brutally frank. But why do you ask?" inquired Sibyl.

"Well, I have here a letter from a mysterious stranger, who asks me to meet him at the pine grove. He says that I am a good looking girl. What does he mean, Miss Sibyl?"

"IS THAT YOU, LOUISE?" HE WHISPERED.

"He doubtless says you are a good looking lass that is, a girl," Sibyl explained. "Let me see the letter."

From the pocket of her dainty apron Louise drew forth the note. Sibyl read it through, hesitated a moment and then turned to her maid.

"Louise, I'll meet this man in your place. I don't want you to be deceived, as I have been. Mr. Judson has proved false, and"— A tiny tear found its way on Sibyl's cheek.

So it was arranged, and the season's belle, Sibyl Stevenson, strolled down toward the clump of tall pine trees near the edge of the lake in the early evening to meet the man who had paid court to her maid. The trees, shaken by the breeze, cast freakish shadows on the ground, and Sibyl was not altogether comfortable.

She was eager to meet this youth who was trifling with the affections of her maid and give him a piece of her mind. She had not long to wait, however, before the tall figure of a man came down the winding path.

With long, swinging strides he approached, stopped a moment as if to make quite sure of—something, she knew not what. Then, to her great surprise, he turned quickly and disappeared.

Sibyl waited until she felt it was no longer safe for her to be out alone and returned to the hotel to tell her maid of the strange occurrence. They discussed the problem, and both decided that the gorgeous gown worn by Miss Stevenson did not look like the simple trimming of her maid. This fact had probably frightened the man away.

The next evening Sibyl, dressed in a plain black frock, with white collar and cuffs and a drooping hat, awaited the mysterious Romeo whom Louise had notified by note to be there at a certain hour.

Again the tall figure swung down the road, a slouch hat pulled down well over his eyes.

"Is that you, Louise?" he whispered.

Sibyl started to scream; then she leaned against a friendly pine tree and in a weak voice claimed the identity.

"Is she wise?" asked the man.

"Is who wise?" reiterated Sibyl, her voice still trembling.

"Why, Miss Stevenson, your mistress," stammered her companion. "Don't stand there like a mummy, you stupid bit of French humanity! Speak up and tell me has she forgiven me and have you arranged it"—

He got no further in his inquiries. Sibyl picked up her little black skirt and ran for home. Once she was safely closeted with Louise she fell vaguely that the echo of a man's hearty laughter had followed her flight.

"Well?" began Sibyl in a most matron-like tone, "what do you mean by plotting with Mr. Judson? Now, do not interrupt me, for it was Mr. Judson who met me."

"Mr. Judson! Impossible!" cried the astonished Louise.

"No other," emphatically assured Sibyl. "Those things may be all right in France, Louise, but no nice American girl will"—

A knock at the door interrupted the end of this sentence. A gentleman was waiting to see Miss Stevenson. The bellboy did not know his name. Sibyl had changed her somber black frock to one of her Paris creations and went to meet her caller.

She glanced into the public parlor, but he was not in sight. Upon inquiry she learned that her guest was waiting on the corner of the plazza for her. She went to meet him, and Harry Judson put forth his hand as she came toward him in the dim light.

"Sibyl, you must hear me," Judson began.

"My dear Mr. Judson," said Sibyl, with stinging sarcasm, "that is just the trouble. I've heard too much from you already."

"Now, please listen. The train was late night before last, we were derailed just the other side of the draw, and I couldn't very well swim all the way here, could I?"

"Is that all you have to say?" inquired Sibyl, but the tone of her voice was a bit softer.

"Except that I love you and"—

"And my maid as well, I suppose," finished Sibyl.

"Don't be a foolish girl, dear. You have a prize in Louise. If you'll promise not to discharge her, I'll tell you a secret. It was Louise who arranged this campaign; it was she who suggested my writing her a letter that would reach you. She's a brick, all right, is Louise."

Sibyl opened her eyes wide and stared at Judson for a moment.

"You mean to tell me that stupid French girl planned all this to give you a chance to explain," hissed Sibyl. "But why?"

"I begged her to and told her you were going to marry me, and I kept you until 2 really two hours. Now, do you understand?"

"Yes, I understand it was not my fault, if you would not."

"But how can you explain about being with Miss Lawton?" suggested Sibyl.

"Easily," assured Judson. "She was on the same train with me, and it was late and dark, and she was afraid, and I offered to see that she landed safely under her parental roof. Surely no decent American could do less, could he?"

"Well, but"— Sybil felt that she was caught in a closely woven net and was trying, though not very hard, to find an opening. Harry looked very penitent, and Sibyl knew that she loved him as much as he loved her.

"Well, will you promise"—

"Anything, dear—anything!" cried Harry without waiting to know what it might be.

"Will you promise to give Louise a pension for life?" asked Sibyl.

And as he took her in his arms he promised that and many other more important things.

All the principal roads throughout this state are to be sign-boarded by the state automobile association. Individual clubs have been asked to take charge of the work of labelling the routes most favored from their own cities to neighboring points.

The Manton Grange has adopted resolutions condeming the action of State Senator Fred C. Wetmore relative to the mineral tax bill. The resolution reads in part: "Be it further resolved, that the experience is convincing that professional failures prove poor material to legislate for the interest of the toiling taxpayers of a great state."

A man who is interested in the fruit canning industry, recently made the following statement regarding the natural conditions for the production of fruit: "Western Michigan is one of the most wonderful countries in the whole world. I honestly believe it is better adapted to growing fruit and vegetables of a high quality and growing them to a high state of perfection, than any other spot I know of in the United States.

Auditor General Fuller furnishes figures to show what it costs to run the state of Michigan, and these figures will be of great interest to every taxpayer and citizen. The figures show the daily average expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909. There were expended by the state for all purposes, the sum of $48,670.90 per day exclusive of primary school money: $130,000.30 per week, $567,007.52 per month, and the aggregate for the year reached the total of $6,814,898.36. If to this total the primary school money was added, the sum would be over $32,000 daily and would approximate a million dollars per month.

The figures regarding the movement of fruit by refrigerator cars help to give an accurate idea of the growing importance of the fruit industry in western Michigan. So far this season better than 2,000 carloads of fruit have been shipped out of the region by this method alone. During the weeks ending September 19, and September 26, there were shipped out by the Fruit Growers' Express 532 and 556 cars respectively.

Even though one-half a thousand is a fairly good showing, the day is soon to be here when the quality of fruit sent from Western Michigan to the great consuming markets will be double what it is at present.

Add to this the heavy shipments by boat from every port embraced within the territory of the Western Michigan Development bureau and the shipments in ordinary freight cars and the above amount is probably multiplied by three or four.

Representatives of the canning company with which Elk Rapids has been figuring for some time arrived in town Monday evening. Tuesday afternoon a meeting of the gentlemen and the directors of the Citizens' Association was held at the office of Attorney Dougherty. A proposition was made that puts it up to our people. They offer to come here for $5,000 more. The directors are now trying to arrange the details of the transaction and find a way to raise the money. There are legal difficulties to be overcome. We think the Citizens' Association will find a way to handle the matter so the cannery will come here. The proposition is eminently fair and liberal. The company wants to come and we want it, and the directors have put their stamp of approval on the proposition, and there the matter rests. We might say to our people, "Don't get nervous; the directors are capable of handling the matter, and will do what is best for the village." The company has mapped out a broad program, and the plans are well under way. A boat will be put on the bay and another on the inland lakes that will visit all points and pick up fruit. So far as the product is concerned the company can sell all that can be turned out. The company's name is sufficient to sell the goods. It looks now as if the location of the plant here in time for next season's business is practically assured.—Progress.

In Michigan the number of notaries public range from 3,500 to 6,500. This means that the governor has to sign his name to that number of commissions every year on average of several each day. For this the state secures $1 per commission, about enough to pay the governor's salary of $5,000 per year.

A crop of potatoes from ninety acres at Ely, planted by the Behling-Hall Manufacturing company, sold last year, for 45 cents per bu., and brought $5,501.40. The total cost of seed and every expense pertaining to the crop, was $2,421.24, leaving a net profit of $3,170.16, or over $35 per acre, considerably more than the price asked the land.

A PAIR OF SURPRISES

They Came With a Talk About the Girl's Engagement.

By JEANNETTE WALDEN.

(Copyright, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.)

The girl made a droll effort to instruct her steps to the strides of the tall grave man with whom she was walking.

Their saddles followed somewhat hopelessly in the rear, bristling with the implements of golf.

"Ha! I never saw you in such a horrid hurry," laughed the girl, "and I never saw you look so—so cross." She raised to his a fair face glowing from exercise and blue eyes dancing with teasing imps.

"Oh, how thoughtless of me, my dear." The man slackened his pace abruptly and looked down at his companion with an indulgent smile—a smile which lighted up his face with a flash of pleasure, though it faded quickly, leaving the shadow of painful contemplation.

"Out with it, friend," encouraged the girl, glancing up at him through a maze of blond ringlets. "Are you in love?" Her voice died out on the last word, as if frightened at its own audacity, and her color spread to her temples. But she walked on gayly beside her mentally ve escort.

"Vivian"—the girl's name as he uttered it was charged at once with a tender sympathy and a portentous seriousness—"I have something on my mind which concerns you as much—perhaps more than it does myself. In fact, I've brought you out here today to talk with you about it. I can think better in the open."

"I wondered why you had condescended to come," laughed the girl, still apparently unimpressed by his mood. "Do you know it has been ages since you have ventured so far from home with me?"

"Press of business," apologized the man weakly.

"And that interesting woman," supplemented the girl, "whoever she is."

The man ignored her challenge. He seemed too deeply troubled to respond to trivialities. "Well, Vivian, shall we go to the club veranda for our talk or seek some hammock on the links, with a bush to shelter us from this over-familiar breeze?"

SHE SPRANG UP AND TURNED HER BACK MOVING SLOWLY AWAY.

"Right here in this little depression, with the white duck shelf to sit on," and the girl was comfortably ensconced before the words were out of her mouth, the bright scarlet of her jacket adding a touch of brilliancy to the landscape.

"But, Hal, what's the use of telling me if it's hard for you to talk about it?" There was sympathy as well as absolute confidence in the deep blue eyes. "You have always decided for me and taken care of my business. I can't do half as well for myself as you have always done for me."

"Thank you, dear." As he gravely bowed he bared his head, exposing his closely cropped wavy brown hair lightly streaked with gray. "But this is a personal matter," he continued as he seated himself beside her. "A guardian, however useful, does not in this enlightened age make or break an engagement."

"But I am engaged already—at least I think I am. But that reminds me—I haven't heard from Tom for a long time."

She spoke with an air of unconcern, while her companion observed her closely.

"What if I should tell you that it seems best to postpone your marriage, Vivian?"

"I should say that would be perfectly jolly!" exclaimed the girl, with a sincerity that was wholly unaffected.

"I know, Vivian, you have never been in a hurry to set the day, but what if—what if"—he watched her narrowly—"I should say that it might be best for you to annul the engagement to Tom Rowland—for a time at least?"

The girl leaned over and rested both hands upon his knee, looking steadily up into his solicitous gray eyes. "It would make me happier than anything else in the world."

"Vivian! You don't love him, then?"

"I do not, Hal."

"Well, then, I'm relieved," he said earnestly.

"Why do you say that? Why are you glad?" It was the girl's turn to be intense.

"Because, dear, he has proved himself unworthy of you. Do you wish—do you care to know"—

She shook her head. "Don't tell me anything unpleasant, please. But is it only on my account that you are glad—is that all?"

She sprang up and turned her back, moving slowly away, while he watched her with puzzled surprise.

"Vivie, child, come back!" he called.

She turned and came swiftly to her seat upon the rock.

"You won't hide anything from your best friend, little girl?"

"Hal, do you doubt me? I have not cared for Rowland—not as I should since the first month I came to your mother's home, and that over a year now."

He took her hand in his own.

"You have cared for some one else, then?" His tone was casual, but a sudden light came into his eyes.

She flashed him one look from fluttering eyelids.

"You, Vivian—you, darling—love an old fellow like me? I can't believe it. Tell me, dear." He took both her hands in his.

She looked up then unflinchingly. The color fled from her face, leaving it pure ivory. "It is so," she said simply.

For a second they gazed into each other's eyes.

"But what about the woman?" teased Vivian.

"What woman?" he asked blankly.

"Why, the one who has been taking you away so much of late, keeping you downtown to dinners, inviting you on every other evening to the club, causing you auto trips to the country and making you work whole Sundays at the office?"

"Oh," he laughed, "you—you are the woman who has kept me away. I knew that I couldn't see so much of you and be loyal to Tom Rowland. So, you see, little girl, you were not the only one in love."

"But some," he added as he raised her to her feet; "let's carry the good news to mother. She will be overjoyed to learn that she is not to lose you."

MULES FOR FARM WORK.

Why a Breeder Considers Them More Desirable Than Horses.

All mules are good mules if properly treated, says a Tennessee breeder. And there is no necessity that any limitations of climate or latitude be placed upon them. When owned and managed by unprejudiced people on northern farms they are as satisfactory in that section as in Tennessee, Missouri or Texas.

Of course where large implements are used and weight is an important factor in a team small mules will not serve. But on the sugar plantations of the south mules sixteen to eighteen hands are common, and, though they have less weight than the draft breeds of horses of the same height, they draw as big a plow and break as much land in a day as most of the heavy horse teams.

As to the cost of keeping, I am sure that they are at least 25 per cent less expensive. And in the matter of use on southern farms or any others, where careless management may be detrimental, mules are far more desirable than horses.

Of course the efficiency of a team of mules in accomplishing farm work depends on the same factors as in the horse teams—that is, quick movement. The average plow mule may be slower than an average plow horse, but there is no need that it should be so. The training is what determines that in most cases, and from my own experience I should say that it is as easy to have a quick stepping mule team as a horse team. If a cotton or sugar planter buys young mules and leaves their breaking to negro farm hands and along with slow, old horses or mules he will be sure to have a very slow walking team.

I once had a four mule team that hitched to a wagon or two plows did as much work as any team in the vicinity. I required that they were to be well treated, and they were as safe to use, accomplished as much work of any kind as the best horse team and cost a fourth less to feed. And another important point—when I parted with the mules at twelve or thirteen years old they seemed to be really in their prime. It is seldom that horses prove as durable.

The Man From Brodney's

hind them, despised and uncountenanced by the oriental elect, were crowded the native women, who down in their hearts loathed the usurpers. It was Chase's hope that the husbands of these simple women would ultimately stand at his side in the fight for supremacy, and they were easily in the majority. If he could convince these men that his dealings with them were honest, Von Blitz could go hang.

He faced the crowd, knowing that all there were against him. "Von Blitz!" he called suddenly. The German started and stepped back involuntarily, as if he had been reprimanded.

"I've called this meeting in order to give you a chance to say to my face some of the things you are saying behind my back. Thank God, all of you men understand English. I want you to hear what Von Blitz has to say in public, and then I want you to hear what I say to him. Von Blitz and Rasula and others, I hear, have undertaken to discredit my motives as the agent of your London advisers. Let me say right here that the man who says that I have played you false in the slightest degree is a liar—a —— liar, if you prefer it that way. You have been told that I am selling you out to the lawyers for the opposition. That is lie No. 1. You have been led to believe that I make false reports to your London solicitors. Lie No. 2. You have been poisoned with the story that I covet certain women in this town, too numerous to mention. I believe. That is lie No. 3. They are all beautiful, my friends, but I wouldn't have one of 'em as a gift.

"For the past few nights my home has been watched.' I want to announce to you that if I see anybody hanging around the bungalow after today I'm going to put a bullet through him, just as I would through a dog. Now, to come down to Von Blitz. You can't drive me out of this island, old man. You have lied about me ever since I beat you up that night. You are sacrificing the best interests of these people in order to gratify a personal spite, in order to wreak a personal vengeance. You"—

Von Blitz, foaming with rage, broke in: "I suppose you will call out the warships! We are not fools! You can fool some of"—

"Now, see here, Von Blitz, I'll show whether I can call out a warship whenever I need one. I have never intended to ask naval help except in case of an attack by our enemies up at the chateau. You can't believe that I seek to turn those big guns against my own clients—the clients I came out here to serve with my life's blood if necessary. But, hear me, you Dutch bluster, I can have a British man-of-war here in ten hours to take you off this island and hang you from a yardarm on the charge of conspiracy against the crown."

Von Blitz and Rasula laughed scornfully and turned to the crowd. The latter began to harangue his fellows.

"This man is a—a—" he began.

"A bluff!" prompted Von Blitz, glaring at his tall accuser.

"A bluff," went on Rasula. "He can do none of these things. Nor can the Americans at the chateau. I know that they are liars. They"—

"I'll make you pay for that, Rasula. Your time is short. Men of Japat, I don't want to serve you unless you trust me"—

A dozen voices cried: "We don't trust you, dog of a Christian, son of a snake!" Von Blitz glowed with satisfaction.

"One moment, please. Rasula knows that I came out here to represent Sir John Brodney. He knows how I am regarded in London. He is jealous because I have not listened to his chatter. I am not responsible for the probable delay in settling the estate. If you are not very careful you will ruin every hope for success that you may have had in the beginning. The crown will take it out of your hands. You've got to show yourselves worthy of handling the affairs of this company. You can't do it if you listen to such carrion as Von Blitz and Rasula. Oh, I'm not afraid of you! I know that you have written to Sir John, Rasula, asking that I be recalled. He won't recall me, rest assured, unless he throws up the case. I have his own letters to prove that he is satisfied with my work out here. I am satisfied that there are enough fair minded men in this crowd to protect me. They will stand by me in the end. I call upon"—

But a howl of dissent from the throng brought him up sharply. His face went white, and for a moment he feared the indecision that stared at him from all sides. He looked frequently in the direction of the distant chateau. Knives slipped from many sashes. Von Blitz was screaming with insane laughter, pointing his finger at the discredited American. While they shouted and cursed, his gaze never left the cleft in the hills. He did not attempt to cry them down. The effort would have been in vain. Suddenly a wild, happy light came into his anxious, searching eyes. He gave a mighty shout and raised his hands, commanding silence.

Selim, clinging to his side, also had seen the skyrocket which arose from the chateau and dropped almost instantly into the wall of trees.

There was something in the face and voice of the American that quelled the riotous disorder.

"You fools!" he shouted. "Take warning! I have told you that I would not turn the guns of England and America against you unless you turned against me. I am your friend, but by the great Mohammed you'll pay for my life with every one of your own if you resort to violence. Listen! Today I learned that my life was threatened. I sent a message in the air to the nearest battleship. There is not an hour in the day or night that I or the people in the chateau cannot

The awestruck crowd parted to let Chase pass

call upon our governments for help. My call today has been answered, as I knew it would be. There is always a warship near at hand, my friends. It is for you to say whether a storm of shot and shell"—

Von Blitz leaped upon a platform and shouted madly: "Fools! Don't believe him! He cannot bring ships here! He lies, he lies! He"—

At that moment a shrill clamor of voices arose in the distance, the cries of women and children. Chase's heart gave a great bound of joy. He knew what it meant.

Chase pointed his finger at Von Blitz and shouted:

"I can't, eh? There's a British warship standing off the harbor now, and her guns are trained"—

But he did not complete the astounding, stupefying sentence. The women were screaming:

"The warship, the warship! Fly, fly!"

In a second the entire assemblage was racing furiously, doubtingly, yet fearfully, toward the pier. Von Blitz and Rasula shouted in calm. They were left with Chase, who smiled triumphantly upon their ghastly faces.

"Gentlemen, they are not deceived. There is a warship out there. You came near to showing your hand too much. Now come along with me, and I'll show my hand to you. Rasula, you'd better draw in your claws. You're entitled to some consideration. But Von Blitz! Jacob, you are standing on very thin ice. I can have you shot tomorrow morning."

Von Blitz sputtered and snarled. "It is all a lie! It is a trick!" He would have drawn his revolver had not Rasula grasped his arm. The native lawyer dragged him off toward the pier, half doubting his own senses.

Just outside the harbor, plainly distinguishable in the moonlight, lay a great cruiser, her searchlights whipping the sky and sea with long white lashes.

The gaping, awestruck crowd in the street parted to let Chase pass through on his way to the bungalow. His manner was that of a mediæval conqueror. He looked neither to right nor to left.

"It's more like a Christian Endeavor meeting than it was ten minute ago," he was saying to himself, all the time wondering when some reckless anarchist would hurl a knife at his back. He gravely winked his eye in the direction of the chateau. "Good old Britt!" he muttered in his exultation.

[TO BE CONTINUED.]

He Set the Example.

A gentleman was once entertaining his friends at a grand dinner. He was a sad boaster and was often guilty of describing deeds that he had done when an officer in the army which those who knew him well felt sure were greatly exaggerated. He was in the midst of some such anecdote when the butler brought him word that a man wished to see him.

"Tell him I am engaged with my friends and can see no one," said the gentleman pompously.

The butler retired, but soon came back to say the man was most urgent in wishing to speak to the gentleman and said he had been in his regiment at a famous battle where he saved his life to the officer.

"Show him in, show him in," said the host, much gratified. "This good fellow says I saved his life at X.," he added, turning to his guests as the old soldier came in. "How was it?" he went on. "For I am sure I forget, in the heat of battle one does brave things almost unconsciously."

"It was like this, your honor," said the soldier. "I owed my life to you, for I certainly should never have thought of running away if you had not set me the example."

I shall always remember with great thankfulness the way my mother gave my first true sight of death. I had a little playfellow named Charlie, who was very dear to me. He died after a short illness. One day my mother took me on her lap.

"You know," said she, "that Charlie has been very ill. Last night Jesus took him to live in Heaven. You know,—as I have often told you, that it is the spirit that lives always, and the body is like a little seed which we plant in the ground. Charlie does not need his body any more, and soon it will be laid away in the ground, but it looks so sweet that I think you will like to see it before we do that, so Aunt Mary is going to take you, and I am going to give you some geranium leaves and begonia blossoms to carry."

It was midwinter with no florist within reach, so flowers at such times came from the house plants of the neighbors.

There was a sweet seriousness in my mother's voice as she told me this, as there always was when she talked of holy things, but no sign of grief. So I was quite willing to go, and, taking Aunt Mary's hand we set forth, and soon reached the house. I know now that all was planned with tender care. There in the parlor by a sunny window in one of Uncle Dan's "prettiest" caskets lay Charlie. Aunt Mary lifted me up and I looked. I saw with satisfaction that Charlie had on his favorite little Scotch plaid suit, and that he wore little white socks and his best slippers with the straps and buttons. The long dark lashes lay gently on the waxen cheeks, his bonny hair was smooth, his sweet mouth faintly smiling. It was a lovely sight.

Aunt Mary put me gently down. "Now shall I give him the flowers?" said she in a low tone.

"Yes," I whispered and opened my little basket. She took them and arranged them.

"Would you like to look again?" said she.

I nodded, she lifted me once more and again I gazed. Never while memory lasts shall I forget that still and sunny room, the peace and beauty of that little figure lying there in the familiar clothes he liked so well. There was nothing to be afraid of, nothing to regret, all was perfectly beautiful.

Arrived at home, mother met us at the door. "Did she see him?" she inquried of my aunt.

"Oh, yes," answered Aunt Mary, "and everything was right."

That night while mother was undressing me I said suddenly, with a quivering lip, "But mother, I can't play with Charlie any more."

Literary Notes

The Youth's Companion abounds in stirring stories of adventure and heroism. One may describe an escape from accidental peril, another a strange encounter with wild creatures—man or beast.

Many of these stories are true as to facts and only disguised as to names and places. A score or more of such stories will be published during 1910 in addition to nearly 200 others—250 good stories in all, and no two alike. And this is not counting the serial stories, which it is believed will be considered by old Companion readers as the best The Companion has ever published.

Every new subscriber will find it of special advantage to send at once the $1.75 for the new 1910 Volume. Not only does he get the beautiful "Venetian" Calendar for 1910, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold but all the issues of The Companion for the remaining weeks of 1909, from the time the subscription is received.

Enough Sleep for Children

Jean Williams, M. D., who is conducting a department of advice to mothers for Woman's Home Companion, says in the October issue:

"Let me say a few words to the mothers who forget that their growing children need long sleeping hours, in order that healthy growth shall be continued and a well-organized nervous system become established. It is especially important that good judgment shall be exercised during puberty. Great physical demands are made at this period, and the wise mother makes every effort to avoid for her children unnecessary dissipation of energy.

"It is not easy to state definitely the number of hours of sleep required, as they are individual requirements that will materially modify any rules; still we may safely say that in the great majority of cases after early infancy, when the normal child sleeps most of the time, at least twelve out of the twenty-four hours should be put in sleep. Until six years of age the daily nap should be added to this. The twelve hours of sleep should continue until the tenth year, and longer if the child is delicate or of especially sensitive nervous organization. From ten to fourteen years, ten hours of sleep are usually required, and often twelve would be advantageous; from fourteen until full maturity the sleeping-hours are, as a rule, more irregular than at any other period of life, and then the effort must be made to compensate for the short hours by longer indulgence when opportunity offers, remembering that few have the endurance to cope with the complexities of modern life and thrive on less sleep than a daily average of eight hours."

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction Sale

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars worth of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed—a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised; these are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction sales write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising will do.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Grange was called to order with Master T. S. Barber in the chair. Fifteen members present.

After the regular order of business, lecturer's hour was taken up with seven good sketches of literature and some very interesting talks on "How to Get the Boys Interested in Farming" and "Keep Them out of the Cities." The ones most interested were Sisters Mann, Addie Barber, Hattie Green and Laura Griffin.

Very good attention was given to an advertisement in the Evening Press of Grand Rapids, presented by Brother H. J. Korthase, saying what danger national prohibition would place our country in. It was discussed by by Henry Mann, Fred Griffin and several others, and we have concluded that the ones who wrote the danger advertisement forgot the other side of the question when they said that 1,453,332 acres of land which was used to raise hay, oats and straw for horses used in the liquor trade, would be a waste. We are all intelligent enough to know that if our nation went dry that these horses would not dry up with it and would have to eat just the same and they would be put to better service. We ask our friends to always make two sides to any subject, for there is always two sides to any thing. It was also remarked that they had forgot the poor children and mothers who are left to starve on account of drink.

Do the right thing at the right time.

Backache is kidney danger.

Doan's Kidney Pills act quickly.

Cure all distressing, dangerous kidney ills.

Plenty of evidence to prove this.

Mrs. John H. Smith, 327 Madison St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "I became so badly run down as a result of kidney trouble that I began to worry about my conditions. At times I could hardly endure the backache and I was also subject to headaches. Nothing I took helped me to any extent until I chanced to learn of Doan's Kidney Pills. This preparation acted like a charm. I am now free from pain and feel well in every way, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills."

Mrs. Smith gave the above testimonial in August 1906 and when interviewed on July 30, 1908, she added: "I still consider Doan's Kidney Pills an effective kidney medicine and I can recommend them as highly today as I did a few years ago. CARE OF FLOWER BEDS.

How to Keep Them Beautiful Al Through the Summer.

All flower beds should at this season of the year be kept in proper shape and condition. All seed pods and withered and yellow leaves should be carefully cleaned and picked off. Frequent stirring with the hoe is good, but not deep enough to in any way injure the roots. It is a good idea every time you mow the grass to take a sharp spade and cut the edge of all your flower beds. It keeps the grass from encroaching on the beds and also keeps the beds to their proper shape and form and makes them have a fresh and neat appearance.

By August many of the soft growing foliage bedding plants, such as coleus, alternantheras achryanthus, etc., will be growing freely and should be kept cut back and not allowed to become straggling. To be pretty, beds having plants of this kind should be uniform. The various colors should not be allowed to intermingle. Golden colored plants should not have red foliage ones sticking their shoots up through the yellow, etc. This is easily prevented by constantly pinching. The main point is to commence pinching early and take the tip out of the young growth. In this way you can scarcely see that the work is going on. If, however, you neglect them until the plants are very tall then you leave stems showing, and the beds are unsightly for awhile.

Some beds are greatly benefited by a mulching of well-rotted stable manure. It is necessary to shake out all the long straw before using, and if the manure is in large pieces chop it with a spade. Rose beds, cannas, hardy herbaceous and verbena beds are all benefitted by mulching. We do not believe it is necessary to thus mulch soft plants, such as the coleus and geraniums, as they grow very well without it. The work of mulching is very simple. All you want to do is to spread the manure over the bed carefully to the depth of about one inch.

How often flower beds in the open air should be watered depends in a great extent upon the character of the soil and variety of plants. If the soil is good stiff loam and you have frequent showers you do not need to water at all. If it is sandy, as near the coast, and the weather dry it is beneficial to water every day. Geraniums seldom need watering when growing in good garden soil. With much water they grow too much to foliage. Cannas and plants of this character do not require much water. For them and geraniums we prefer much hoeing.

If using a hose sprinkler to water have just force enough to water without washing the ground. Hold the sprinkler near the ground so the water goes first where you want it. Geraniums should not have the flower heads watered if you can avoid it, as it spoils them completely. The evening, after sundown, is the best time to water, as the plants have all night to take up the moisture, and artificial watering is soon evaporated under the combined effects of wind and hot summer sun.

PRIZE DAY A SUCCESS

Fine Showing Made of Charlevoix Products

EVERY TOWNSHIP IN THIS VICINITY

Represented Among the Winners of Prizes

Bidding at Auction was Spirited—D. S. Payton Secured the Best for Grange Exhibit at Traverse City.

Quite a few of the products of Charlevoix county's farms were brought in Saturday to compete for the valuable prizes offered, but owing to the farmers being busy at potato and beet harvest not so many as were hoped for. The specimens which were displayed however, were a revelation to many who never before had had their attention brought to the superior fruit which we are producing every day with hardly any care.

To disprove that we are not able to raise corn, James O'Brien and A. Reynolds exhibited corn which would bear comparison with corn raised anywhere. The potatoes, pumpkins, squash and cabbage were also mammoth ones. The list of prize winners were as follows:

APPLES—Northern Spy:
First prize, William McNally
Second prize, T. L. Johnson
Baldwin
First prize, William Bird
Second prize, Lewis Gravlin
Wagner
First prize, H. Gornell
Second prize, F. W. Smith
CORN—
First prize, James O'Brien
Second prize, A. Reynolds
SQUASH—
First prize, Fred Sneathen
Second prize, E. A. Reed
PUMPKIN—
First prize, Fred Sneathen
Second prize, Ed. Boss
CABBAGE—
First prize, William Lyngklip
Second prize, Hugh McCartney

Exhibits were made by the following, every nearby township being represented. Apples, Northern Spy—William Bird, George Anderson, Webster Helms, Robert Gregory, William McNally, T. L. Johnson. Wagners—H. Gornell, F. W. Smith George Anderson, J. Lewis, Ed. McClanathan, E. A. Reed. Baldwins—William Bird, Lewis Gravlin, G. Winkler, Starke—H. Gornell. Pears—George Anderson. Corn—James O'Brien, A. Reynolds. Pumpkin—Fred Sneathen, Ed. Boss, C. Cork, J. Lewis. Potatoes—James O'Brien. Squash—Fred Sneathen, Ed. Reed, W. Lyngklip, Hugh McCartney, A. Reynolds.

The bidding for the prize articles was spirited, Mr. King desiring them for exhibition purposes at Detroit and D. S. Payton being after them to take to the meeting of the state grange. Needless to say, Payton, as usual got everything he went after, and secured three bushel of apples, one of potatoes, two of corn, two pumpkins and a squash to add to the Charlevoix county exhibit.

REPORT OF BAXTER W. R. C.

For the Quarter Ending October 14—Interesting Meetings

The following is the official report of Baxter W. R. C. for four months beginoing July 0 and ending October 14.

The July meeting was so poorly attended on account of the busy season, that it was decided to put over our next meeting to September 9 on which date we had a better turnout. On October 14 there was a good attendance and a very interesting session, a program, etc. It was voted to invite Mrs. Hemstreet, Department Inspector of Michigan, to visit November 11, our next regular meeting. It was also voted to make Mrs. Kanagy, of Atwood a life member of our order.

October 9 the first ten cent tea was given for flower fund, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Myron Geer and was well attended. After a very pleasant afternoon and a sumptous supper we bade our host and hostess good by wishing them a pleasant winter and a safe return to home and friends in Charlevoix the Beautiful. Out of town guests were Mrs. Black of St. Johns and Mrs. Jenkins of Harbor Springs.

FINED FIFTY DOLLARS

East Jordan Woman Who Failed to Return Find

Was the First Case of the Kind in Charlevoix County

On September 8th Wm. Hite lost a roll of bills containing some $87 of the lawful money of the realm. That same day the roll was picked up by Mrs. Cora Matthews but this fact did not come to light for some weeks as she neglected to publish her find in the local papers and take the other necessary steps provided by the statute for such cases. When Mr. Hite finally learned who had found his money Mrs. Matthews refused to give it up claiming that she had given it to another claimant. There were a number of discrepancies in her story, however, and on Wednesday of this week she was brought before Justice D. H. Fitch, and a jury composed of six citizens of the town. Prosecutor Nicholas appeared for the people and Mrs. Matthews pleaded her own case with the result that when the evidence was all in the jury found the defendant guilty as charged in the complaint and Justice Fitch sentenced her to pay a fine of $50 or spend 90 days in the county jail. After spending a night in the local lockup Mrs. Matthews decided that she didn't want to go to Charlevoix and paid the fine—Enterprise.

LEAD THE WORLD

Will This Region as a Prodocer of Fruit

Company Headed by World Known Authority Buys Land

To show how the possibilities of this section, as a fruit producing section, appeals to men who know, we have only to announce that a company headed by such men as Professor L. R. Taft, who for so many years has been at the head of the horticultural department of the Michigan Agricultural College, C. D. Woodbury, proprietor of the Peninsula stock farm and one of Lansing's best known business men, has purchased a tract of several hundred acres in this county which will be devoted to the growing of fruit under the direction of Professor Taft.

Professor Taft is one of the greatest fruit experts in the world having been, at different times, head of all the national associations of fruit growers, and, when after careful investigations, which he has been making all summer, he puts his approval upon Charlevoix county as a place for the establishment of a fruit farm which will be conducted upon the most approved methods there can be no question that this region will become the fruit center of the nation.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

Governor Warner has appointed the commission on industrial education, the members being Prof. W. H. French of Lansing, Wellington R. Burt, Saginaw, E. W. Yost, Detroit, Prof. Geo. McGee, Cadillac, H. E. Kratz, Calumet, Supt. S. O. Hartwell, Kalamazoo, Charles H. Johnson, deputy commissioner of labor, Detroit.

GRAND RAPIDS WINNER

Was Chosen as Next Meeting Place of I. O. O. F.

At Session Held at the Soo—A. M. Coburn New Grand Master

The meeting of the Grand Lodge I. O. O. F., at the Soo last week was a winner all the way through. Grand Rapids was chosen as the next place of meeting. Alpena Detroit and Bay City were in the fight tooth and nail, in fact there was less talk of Grand Rapids heard about town than any of the others. The Furniture City's showing was a surprise to many. Bay City was the first mentioned at the session and a loud viva voce vote was given that town. The cheering that followed the motion for Grand Rapids was deafening and left no question which the majority of minds favored.

The committee on election returns reported Thursday morning, placing A. M. Coburn of Detroit, in the grand master's chair. The installation took place this afternoon. The list follows:

Grand master—A. M. Coburn of Detroit.
Deputy grand master—C. F. Ganschow, of Detroit.
Grand warden—F. R. Hamburger of Detroit.
Grand secretary—H. N. Wilder of Lansing.
Grand treasurer—Fred Cutler, Jr., of Ionia.
Grand representative (short term)—William G. Kennedy, Mt. Pleasant
Grand representative (long term)—William H. Flynn of Detroit, retiring grand master.

The Rebekah assembly elected the following officers.

President—Mrs. Emma Nieman, Bay City.
Vice-president—Mrs Hattie Jackson, Detroit.
Warden—Mrs. Flora Harl, Marshall.
Secretary—Mrs. Ida M. Davis, Hamilton.
Treasurer—Mrs. Clara Stover, Grand Rapids.

The new president announced the following appointments:

C. H. S. NOTES.

Hurbert Paddock is on the sick list this week.

Lillian Flanders is absent on account of the illness of her mother.

Arrangements have been made between Boyne City and Charlevoix high schools to continue the Spelling contest which began last year. Each school making out lists of twenty-five words, alternate weeks, these to be placed on the board Thursday morning and pronounced Friday morning. The contest to be closed in the spring by a "Spelling down" match, to be held in Charvoix.

The high school football team met with defeat at Petoskey, Saturday, October 23, by a score of eleven to nothing. The team was somewhat crippled by the absence of Paddock and the injury to Mayne, making it necessary to put in substitutes. The boys played a consistant game throughout. They are not discouraged but are determined to win the three remaining games with Boyne City, East Jordan and Traverse City. The Boyne City teams come to Charlevoix next Saturday, the game at one o'clock p. m. is between the second teams and at 2:30 o'clock p. m. between the first teams. The home squad needs the encouragement of the Charlevoix people for next Saturday's game, as the Boyne City team has not as yet been scored upon.

ON RURAL ROUTE NO. 1

Farmers are Making Money in Fruit, Beets and Potatoes

Notes Gathered by COURIER Man on His Travels

This week The COURIER man has been at work on Rural Route No 1 and among the many good farms in that region had his attention called to a few in particular where he was given information in regard to the yield and income received.

Earl Dodd in demonstrating what can be done with Charlevoix county land. On a farm which was wild land six years ago, he has six acres of potatoes which will yield over 150 bushels to the acre and 2½ acres of beets which will go better than ten ton to the acre. The entire farm is being put in good shape and proves what a young man can do in this section by hustling.

William Straw, one of Marion's best known farmers, has a farm of 120 acres which is among the best in the county, his buildings and farm surroundings all being in first class shape. Mr. Straw has the figures to prove that farming in Charlevoix county is profitable. From about four acres of orchard Mr. Straw sold $225 worth of fruit and had four acres of oats yielding 256 bushel. These are not fancy crops and his corn and beets will show equally as good returns.

Out farther on Route No. 1, we noticed the potato fields of David Alexander, Bert Helms, R. B. Machett and Fred and Lawrence Boss, all of which gave indications of a profitable crop.

PEOPLE ARE JUST AWAKENING

To the Real Value of Land in Michigan

RESULT OF JUDICIOUS ADVERTISING

Transportation Facilities are Unexcelled by Any State

Great Lakes Makes It Most Healthful Region in World—Soil Adapted to Production of All Crops

The people of Michigan are just awakening to the value of the region in which they live. While this is particularly true of Western Michigan it is more or less true of the entire state. One of the best evidences of this is the fact that the railroads have started advertising campaigns for the sale of land. Such campaigns were useless as long as the people in the region in which these lands were situated talked about them collectively and indiscriminately as "pine barrens" and "sand wastes," but the time has now come when people are ready to back up with words and dollars what ever effort the railroads, real estate men or anybody else may put forth.

We are led to say this much by the following which we take from a piece of advertising issued by the Michigan Central railroad in its homeseekers' booklet. The advertising is good stuff and reads as follows:

"Perhaps you have never thought it possible for you to own a home or farm, if not, now is the time to give the matter serious consideration. Today the state of Michigan presents a great opportunity to the ambitious man and the man of limited means.

Land values in the northern part of the lower peninsula are very low at the present time as compared with prices in less favorable localities. As a result there is growing interest in Michigan farm lands on the part of those who are seeking homes to use to yield the best returns. A small amount invested now will insure a living and comfortable home for life, or, if preferred to hold simply as an investment without doubt the increase in valuation will yield splendid returns on the money invested.

No matter how cheap the land or how fertile the soil, if it is inconveniently or remotely located to transportation or the consuming markets, such land is expensive at any price. It is only necessary to look on the map to note the proximity of all northern Michigan land to the railroad and water routes leading to the great consuming cities within the state.

The land itself is varied in character—parts of it being sandy, which has been classed by experts as the finest fruit land in the state, large tracts of which are now being developed into orchards.

Expert examinations show that the land is adapted to grow such crops as corn, wheat, oats, rye, buckwheat, barley, clover, timothy and alfalfa, also root crops such as, potatoes, sugar beets, turnips, carrots and cabbage.

Hundreds of thousands of acres of land capable of producing the crops just enumerated are for sale in this great state with splendid transportation facilities where it should be generally known that Michigan is one of the most healthful states in the country and in the world. Through the influence of the Great Lakes which nearly surround the state, temperature is rendered milder in winter and cooler in summer and has no peer among the states for advancement and successful sanitary conditions.

The water is clear, sparkling, pure, and found in abundance at a reasonable depth. Beautiful streams of flowing water traverse the lands for many miles.—Manistee News.

FOR CONSTIPATION

A Medicine that Does Not Cost Anything Unless It Gives Satisfactory Relief

If you suffer from constipation in any form whatever, acute or chronic, we will guarantee to supply you medicine that we honestly believe will effect permanent relief if taken with regularity and according to directions for a reasonable length of time. Should the medicine fail to benefit you to your entire satisfaction we promise that it shall cost you nothing.

No other remedy can be compared with Rexall Orderlies for the easy, pleasant and successful treatment of constipation. The active medicinal ingredients of this remedy, which is odorless, colorless and tasteless, is an entirely new discovery. Combined with other valuable ingredients, it forms a preparation which is incomparable as a perfect bowel regulator, intestional invigorator and strengthener. Rexall Orderlies are eaten like candy, and are notable for their gentle and agreeable action. They do not cause griping or any disagreeable effect or inconvenience, and may be taken at any time, day or night.

We particularly recommend Rexall Orderlies for children and for delicate or aged persons, because they do not contain anything injurious. Unlike other preparations they do not create a habit, but instead they overcome the habits acquired through the use of ordinary laxatives, cathartics, and harsh physic, and removes the cause of constipation or irregular bowel action that are not of surgical variety.

We want you to try Rexall Orderlies at our risk. We know of nothing that will do you so much good. They are prepared in tablet form in two sizes: 36 tablets 25 cents, and 12 tablets 10 cents. Remember you can obtain Rexall remedies in Charlevoix only at our store,—The Rexall Store, A. B Fleischer, The Ivy Drug Store.

Real Bottomless Pits.

Bottomless pits are facts, not fancies, according to Professor E. A. Martel, the French geologist. He declares that this term may be applied to cliff caves whose lower part has been cut off by the erosion of the valley below, thus turning them into tunnels, through which the valley may be seen. The most remarkable abyss of this kind which the savant has seen is the so called lade of Padirac, on the summit of the eastern ridge of Vercors, above Clelles. At about 5,400 feet a horizontal orifice opens suddenly like the mouth of an ordinary cave, which it probably once was. The bottom has been cut off, demolished by the immense erosion of the vast basin of treves to the east, 2,500 to 3,200 feet deep, on which the present lower orifice of the present cave opens out in a superb arch twenty-six feet high. From the railway between the stations of Clelles and Perey, on the line from Grenoble to Veynes, it is seen 2,300 feet in the air like a pinhole near the summit of a limestone cliff. It was from the car window that the extraordinary aperture was discovered. In Belgium in the Grand Duke's hole one may descend and contemplate the windings of the Lesse, holding to the shrubbery to avoid being precipitated into the river 250 feet below. In the chalk cliffs of Etretat there is another evidence of an incompletely destroyed cave whose remaining upper entrance doubtless soon will disappear.

Needless Wear of Roads by Autos.

A county surveyor protests against the habit which many motorists have of doing the majority of their driving on the crown or center of the road. This method of driving means that one portion of the road takes all the wear and naturally, of course, gets worn into ruts and ridges. If the traffic would spread itself and make all that portion of the road from gutter to the top of the crown take a share of the wear, road surfaces would last much longer and would require less frequent repair. In these days whoever it was made a boast that there is no excuse for this habit of clinging to the center but where roads are made with a great deal of caution it is perhaps excusable, as driving on a road that is the reverse of pleasant.

FARM ORCHARD AND GARDEN BY F.E.TRIGG REGISTER, ROCKFORD, IA.
CORRESPONDENCE SOLICITED

[This matter must not be reprinted without special permission.]

Kansas holds the blue ribbon for the highest price ever paid for a load of farm products in the shape of a load of alfalfa seed bought by a dealer at Garden City. The load weighed 19,733 pounds, or 328⅔ bushels. The price paid was $8 per bushel, and the value of the whole load was $2,631.45.

The Minnesota Agricultural college has ascertained through experiments that the cost of raising ten tons of green corn per acre and putting it into the silo is $18.30, making one pound of digestible nutrients cost .5+ mills. An acre of mangels yielding twenty tons cost $5.42 to raise and harvest, making a pound of digestible nutrients cost 23 mills, or nearly twice the cost of the silage.

Among the many wonders of the insect world none is more marvelous than the queen bee. She has been known to lay as high as 3,000 eggs a day, and during her life of about five years it is estimated that she sometimes produces a total of 25,000,000 eggs. While the queen is worth of course what it costs to raise her, good ones bring all the way from $1 to $18 apiece.

The owner of the Canyon ranch in Texas has been pasturing 16,000 sheep during the present season in the La Barge pasture near Kaw City, Okla. The 16,000 are divided into seven flocks, each being in charge of a Mexican herder, who does his work on foot, carries a small tent and provisions about with him, does his own cooking and moves his flock from place to place under the direction of the American superintendent who has charge of the outfit.

An acre of corn with hills three feet four inches apart each way will produce fifty bushels of ear corn if the stalks in each hill produce on an average a pound of corn. Did they produce a pound and a half per hill the yield would be seventy-five bushels per acre, while if two pounds the yield would be 100 bushels. While the last yield would be on the bumper order it is not hard to see that it would not be impossible on rich land with a full stand of big corn.

The prosecution of agriculture with a serious purpose of succeeding is fraught with obstacles and handicaps enough in the very nature of things without a fellow's taking on the booze habit. While this may be indulged at the start for the purpose of drowning trouble it always trebles a fellow's troubles, taking away the keen edge of physical force and endurance and the clearness of mind that are particularly indispensable if the way is rather uphill and rough and there are real difficulties to overcome.

The revised government estimates of last year's cotton crop place the total acreage at 33,370,000 acres, the area actually picked 32,440,000 and the average yield per acre 191.9 pounds, not quite two-fifths of a bale per acre. The states leading in cotton production, with average acre yield, are as follows: Texas, 9,336,000 acres, 126 pounds; Georgia, 4,818,000 acres, 190 pounds; Alabama, 3,501,000 acres, 179 pounds; Mississippi, 3,295,000 acres, 235 pounds; South Carolina, 2,515,000 acres, 213 pounds; Oklahoma, 2,311,000 acres, 143 pounds. Missouri had but 87,000 acres to cotton, but her acre yield was 340 pounds.

A ROAD IN PANAMA.

Features of a Highway Built by the United States Government.

Road building down on the isthmus of Panama does of necessity get its share of attention, too, but by the Americans, however, for when they find that the business of the zone can best be facilitated by the making of good roads the work is then commenced. But it must be remembered that there are no roads at all, so when they build they build good ones.

There has recently been thrown open a new road in the zone which extends from the Boulevard Fourth de Julio to the La Boca road. It comes through Ancon, canal zone, and is a sort of boundary line between the zone and Panama, Panama being on the right, while Ancon is on the left. Before this road was opened up road traffic between Ancon, canal zone, and La Boca had to travel a route about one and one-half miles longer than the present route, thus causing the consumption of much time in the zone's business traffic. The present route is what might be called a "short cut."

The road was ballasted with crushed stone on its completion and has since been rehallasted, so as to stand the long rainy season. This was done by first going over it with more crushed stone, followed by a water sprinkling wagon, after which a road roller went over it. The roller may be seen in the distance. The road is now in a substantial condition.

The republic of Panama has no roads, and yet this is the one thing that will give impetus to the business of her people. It is only a matter of time when there will be roads through the zone extending from the city of Panama to that of Colon. By having these the business of the canal zone can be expedited.

Some one may ask, What does the one span bridge amount to? Well, it means much down on the isthmus.

ROAD OPENED IN ANCON AND BRIDGE ON HIGHWAY FROM ANCON TO LA BOCA.
[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

There are no bridges, and when it rains you must wait for the swollen streams to go down before you can cross. The illustration shows a one span iron bridge recently erected in place of an old wooden frame on the La Boca road. It has a wooden floor, upon which a concrete floor was laid. This is the road into which the new Ancon road leads. Houses in the distance are laborers' quarters. If you advance in the photo you approach La Boca docks; if you turn and come back you will enter the newly opened road.

Since this road has been open the benefit of the "short cut" has been taken by many of the general public who find the old route too far out of the way for quick travel. It may be called also a "necessity road."—C. Morton Dame in Good Roads Magazine.

CHAPTER XII

THE LANTERN ABOVE.

CHASE sat for hours on his porch that night gazing down upon the chateau. Lights gleamed in a hundred of its windows. The loneliness of his own isolation, the ostracism that circumstance had forced upon him, would have been maddening on this night had not all rancor been tempered by the glorious achievement in the market place. He wondered if the princess knew what he had dared and what he had accomplished in the early hours of the night. He wondered if they had pointed out his solitary light to her if now and then she bestowed a casual glance upon that twinkling star of his. The porch lantern hung almost directly above his head.

The chateau was indeed the home of revelry. The pent up, struggling spirits of those who had dwelt therein for months in solitude arose in the wild stampede for freedom. All petty differences between Lady Deppingham and Drusilla Browne, and they were quite common now, were forgotten in the whirlwind of relief that came with the strangers from the yacht. Mrs. Browne's good looking, eager husband reveled in the prospect of this delirious night, this almost Arabian night. He was swept off his feet by the radiant princess: the Scheherezade of his boyhood dreams. His idle heart thumped as it had not done since he was a boy. The Duchess of N. and the handsome Marchioness of B. came into his tired, hungry life at a moment when it most needed the light. It was he who fairly dragged Lady Agnes aside and proposed the banquet, the dance, the concert—everything—and it was he who carried out the hundred spasmodic instructions that she gave.

Late in the night, long after the dinner and the dance, the tired but happy company flocked to the picturesque hanging garden for rest and the last refreshment.

The hanging garden was a wonderfully constructed open air plaisance suspended between the chateau itself and the great cliff in whose shadow it stood. The cliff towered at least 300 feet above the roof of the spreading chateau, a veritable stone wall that extended for a mile or more in either direction.

Near the chateau there was a real waterfall, reminding one in no small sense of the misty veils at Lauterbrunnen or Giesbach. The swift stream which obtained life from these falls, big and little, ran along the base of the cliff for some distance and was then diverted by means of a deep, artificial channel into an almost complete circuit of the chateau, forming the moat. It sped along at the foot of the upper terrace, a wide torrent that washed between solid walls of masonry, which rose to a height of not less than ten feet on either side. There were two drawbridges, seldom used, but always practicable. A small stationary bridge crossed the vicious stream immediately below the hanging garden and led to the ladders by which one ascended to the caverns that ran far back into the mountain.

Two big black irregular holes in the face of the cliff marked the entrance to these deep, rambling caves, wonderful caverns wrought by the convulsions of the dead volcano, cracks made by these splintering earthquakes when the island was new.

The garden hung high between the building and the cliff, swung by a score of great steel cables. These cables were riveted soundly in the solid rock of the cliff at one end and fastened as safely to the stone walls of the chateau at the other. It swung staunchly from its moorings with the consistency of a suspension bridge and trembled at the slightest touch.

It was at least a hundred feet square. The floor was covered with a foot or more of soil, in which the rich grass and plants of the tropics flourished. Cool fountains sprayed the air at either end of the green inclosure. The illusion was complete.

The walls surrounding the garden were three feet high and were intended to represent the typical English garden wall of brick. To gain access to the hanging garden one crossed a narrow bridge which led from the second balcony of the chateau. There was not an hour in the day when protection from the sun could not be found in this little paradise.

Bobby Browne was holding forth with his usual exuberance on the magnificence of the British navy.

"There she is now, sleeping out there in the harbor, a great, big thing with the kindest of hearts inside of those steel ribs—her majesty's ship, the King's Own! Think of it! She convoys a private yacht, she stops off at this beastly island to catch her breath and to see that all are safe, then she charges off into the horizon like a bird that has no home. May I offer you a cigarette, princess? By the way, I wonder how Chase came off with his side show."

"Saunders tells me that he was near to being butchered, but luck was with him," said Deppingham. "His ship came home."

"It was a darling trick. I'm glad he pulled it off. He's a man, that fellow is," said Browne. "See, princess, away up there in the mountain is his home. There's a light. See it? He keeps rather late hours, you see."

"Tell me about him," said the princess suddenly. She arose and walked to the vine covered wall, followed by Bobby Browne.

"I don't know much to tell you," said he. "He's made an enemy or two, and they are trying to drive him out. We've asked him down here just because we can't bear to think of a fellow creature wasting his days in utter loneliness, but he has so far declined with thanks. The Islanders are beginning to hate him. They distrust him, Britt says. Of course you know why we are here. You"—

"Every one knows, Mr. Browne. You are the most interesting quartet in the world just now. Every one is wondering how it is going to end. What a pity you can't marry Lady Agnes!"

"Oh, I say!" protested Browne. She laughed merrily.

"But how dull it must be for Mr. Chase! Does he complain?"

"I can't say that he does. Britt—that's my lawyer—Britt says he's never heard a murmur from him. He takes his medicine with a smile. I like that sort of fellow, and I wish he'd be a little more friendly."

"He has learned to know and keep his place," said she coolly. Perhaps she was thinking of his last night in the palace garden. Away up there in the darkness gleamed his single, lonely, pathetic little light. "Isn't it rather odd, Mr. Browne, that his light should be burning at 2 o'clock in the morning? Is it his custom to sit up?"

"I've never noticed it before, now you speak of it. I hope nothing serious has happened to him. He may have been injured in— I say, if you don't mind, I'll ask some one to telephone up to his place."

"Yes, do telephone," she broke in. "I am sure Lady Deppingham will approve. No, thank you, I will stand here awhile. It is cool, and I love the stars." Five minutes later he returned to her, accompanied by Lady Agnes. She was still looking at the stars.

"Lady Deppingham called him up," said Bobby.

"And he answered in person," said her ladyship. "He seemed strangely agitated for a moment or two, Genevra, and then he laughed—yes, laughed in my face, although it was such a long way off. I asked him if he was ill or had been hurt. He said he never felt better in his life and hadn't a scratch. He laughed—I suppose to show me that he was all right. Then he asked me to thank you for bringing a warship. You saved his life. Really, one would think you were quite a heroine or a godsend or something like that. I never heard anything sweeter than the way he said good night to me. There!"

The light in the bungalow hobbled mysteriously for an instant and then went out.

"How far is it from here?" asked the princess abruptly.

"Nearly two miles as the crow flies, only there are no crows here. Five miles by the road, I fancy. Isn't it, Bobby? I call him Bobby, you know, when we are all on good terms. I don't see why I shouldn't if you stop to think how near to being married to each other we are at this very instant."

"I wonder if help could reach him quickly in the event of an attack."

"It could if he'd have the kindness to notify us by phone," said Browne.

"But he wouldn't telephone to us," said Lady Deppingham coolly. "He's not so communicative as that."

"Surely he would call upon you for help if he"—

"You don't know him, Genevra."

The princess smiled in a vague sort of way. "I've met him quite informally, if you remember."

"I should say it was informally. It's the most delicious story I've ever heard. You must tell it to Mr. Browne, dear. It's all about the enemy in Thorberg, Mr. Browne. There's your wife calling, Bobby. She wants you to tell that story again about the bishop who rang the doorbell."

The next morning the captain of the King's Own came ashore and was taken to the chateau for dejeuner. Late in the afternoon the marquis and his party, saying farewell to the princess and the revived legatees, put out to the yacht and steamed away in the wake of the great warship. The yacht was to return in a month to pick up the princess.

Genevra, her maids, her men and her boxes, her poodle and her dachshund were left behind for the month of March—not without misgiving, it must be said, for the marquis, her uncle, was not disposed to look upon the island situation as a spot of long continued peace.

"You won't be able to get help as cleverly and as timely as that American chap got it last night," protested the marquis. "Warships don't browse around like gulls, you know. Karl will never forgive me if I leave you here."

"Karl is of a very forgiving nature, uncle, dear," said Genevra sweetly. "He forgave you for defending Mr.

"I hope no harm comes to you here in this beastly place."

Chase, because you are such a nice Englishman. I've induced him to forgive Mr. Chase because he's such a nice American—although Mr. Chase doesn't seem to know it—and I'm quite sure Karl would shake his hand if he should come upon him anywhere. Leave Karl to me, uncle."

And so they sailed away without her, just as she had intended from the beginning. Lord Deppingham stood beside her on the pier as the shore party waved its adieus to the yacht.

"By Jove, Genevra, I hope no harm comes to you here in this beastly place?" said he, a look of anxiety in his honest eyes. "There goes our salvation if any rumpus should come up. We can't call 'em out of the sky as Chase did last night. Lucky beggar! That fellow Chase is ripping, by Jove! That's what he is. I wish he'd open up his heart a bit and ask us into that devilish American bar of his."

"He owes us something for the warship we delivered to him last night," said Bobby. "He has made good with his warship story, after all, thanks to the King's Own and Britt."

"And the fairy princess," added Lady Deppingham.

"I am doubly glad I came if you include me in the miracle," said Genevra, shuddering a little as she looked at the lounging natives. "Isn't it rather more of a miracle that I should come upon mine ancient champion in this unheard of corner of the globe?"

"I'd like to hear the story of Chase and his adventures in the queen's garden," reminded Bobby Browne.

"I'll tell it to you tonight, my children," said the princess as they started for the palanquins.

Hollingsworth Chase dodged into the American bar just in time to escape the charge of spying.

CHAPTER XIII.

MR. SAUNDERS HAS A PLAN.

MISS PELHAM'S affair with Thomas Saunders by this time had reached the stage where observers feel a hesitancy about twitting the parties most concerned.

"Miss Pelham is a clever girl, much cleverer than Saunders would be if he were a girl," said Britt. "She's found out that he earns a thousand a year and that his mother is a very old woman. That shows foresight. She says she's just crazy about London, although she doesn't know where Hammersmith is. That shows discretion. She's anxious to see the boats at Putney and talks like an encyclopedia about Kew gardens. That shows diplomacy. You see, Saunders lives in Hammersmith, not far from the bridge, all alone with his mother, who owns the house and garden. It's all very appealing to Miss Pelham, who has got devilish tired of seeing the universe from a nineteenth story in Broadway."

"She's a very nice girl," agreed Bobby Browne.

"A very saucy one," added Deppingham, who had come a severe cropper in his single attempt to interest her in a mild flirtation.

"She's off with Saunders now," went on Britt. "That's why you can't find him, my lord. If you really want him, however, I think you can reach him by strolling through the lower end of the park, but don't fail to shout."

"I do want him, confound him! I want to ask him how many days there are left before our time is up on the island. Demmed annoying that I can't have legal advice when I"—

"How many days have you been here?"

"How the devil should I know? That's what we've got Saunders here for. He's supposed to tell us when to go home and all that sort of thing, you know."

Deppingham, phlegmatic soul, was forever disturbing Saunders with calls to duty, although Saunders was brutish enough in his British way to maintain—in confidence, of course—that he was in the employ of Lady Deppingham or no one at all. Nevertheless he always lived under the shadow of duty. At any moment his lordship was liable to send for him to ask the time of day or some equally important question. And this brings us to the hour when Saunders unfolded his startling solution to the problem that confronted them all.

First he confided in Britt secretly sagely and in perfect good faith. Britt was bowled over. He stared at Saunders and gasped. Nearly two minutes elapsed before he could find words to reply, which proves conclusively that it must have been something of a shock to him. When at last he did express himself, however, there was nothing that could have been left unsaid—absolutely nothing. He went so far as to call Saunders a doddering fool and a great many other things that Saunders had not in the least expected.

The Englishman was stubborn. They had it back and forth, from legal and other points of view, and finally Britt gave in to his colleague, reserving the right to laugh when it was all over. Saunders, with a determination that surprised even himself, called for a conference of all parties in Wyckholme's study at 4 o'clock.

"Now, what's it all about, Saunders?" demanded Deppingham, with a wide yawn. Saunders looked hurt.

"It is high time we were discussing some way out of our difficulties," he said. "But five weeks remain before our stay is over. The apparent impossibility of marriage between Lady Deppingham and Mr. Browne naturally throws our joint cause into jeopardy. There would be no controversy, of course, if the terms of the will could be carried out in that respect. The islanders understand our position and seem secure in their rights. They imagine that they have us beaten on the face of things. Now, the thing for us to do is to get married."

He came to this conclusion with startling abruptness. Four of his hearers stared at him in blank astonishment.

"Get married?" murmured first one, then another.

"Are you crazy?" demanded Browne. Britt was grinning broadly.

"Certainly not!" snapped Saunders.

"Oh, by Jove!" exclaimed Deppingham, relieved. "I see. You mean you contemplate getting married. I congratulate you. You gave me quite a shock, Saund"—

"I don't mean anything of the sort, my lord," said Saunders, getting very red in the face. Miss Pelham looked up from her notebook quickly. He winked at her, and her ladyship saw him do it. "I mean that it is high time that Lady Deppingham and Mr. Browne were getting married. We haven't much time to spare. If"—

"Good Lord!" gasped Bobby Browne. "You are crazy, after all."

"Open the window and give some air," said Britt coolly.

"See here, Saunders, what the devil is the matter with you?" roared Deppingham.

"My lord, I am here to act as your legal adviser," said Saunders, with dig-

POULTRY TRAP NESTS.

Easily Constructed and Warranted to Give Good Satisfaction.

The illustration marked A represents a trap nest constructed by students in the poultry course at the Pennsylvania State college. It is made out of an orange box.

All that is required to make these trap nests are a frame and tilt, as shown in the figure. The tilt is balanced. On the hen entering the nest at the rear of box her back touches the tilt, which drops forward and confines her till released. This trap nest gives good satisfaction and can be made very cheaply. "Ideal" trap nests, shown in figure marked B, have also been used and found quite satisfactory. They have the advantage of occupying small space.

When one is anxious to build up a certain strain of birds, either for egg production, special, fancy or exhibition stock, the trap nest, if looked after, will show which hens lay, and which hens lay certain eggs, thus enabling the breeder to know exactly what he is doing. They require considerable time in the way of keeping records and releasing the hens after laying.

Each hen has her own individuality. Certain hens lay eggs that are nearly always hatchable. Some hens lay well. Their eggs are nearly always fertile, but will not hatch either under hens or in incubators. The chicks will develop to a certain size, often fully formed, but die in the shell. A few hens lay eggs that are seldom fertile. In selecting birds one has several objects. The saying is often heard that "the hen that lays is the hen that pays." The majority of those in the business consider egg production the best end of the business. It is often the surest. There is much less risk attached to it. Then if the production can be increased from five to ten eggs a hen per year you are doing a good business. The average hen does not produce over eighty eggs a year. At the Maine station, where the trap nest system has been in use some years, the record last year was between 135 to 140 eggs per hen, which shows a considerable gain over previous years.

New Land For Fruit.

Fruits of all kinds do well upon cleared woodland, provided, of course, that the location and mechanical condition of the soil are suitable. But it is not wise to plant trees on such land until it has been thoroughly plowed and is in a condition to be conveniently cultivated. In planting an orchard upon stumpy land stumps should not be allowed to remain in proximity to the newly set trees. The stumps will not only interfere with cultivation, but greatly endanger the trees by bruises from horse or plow.

Among small fruits the strawberry thrives especially well on recently cleared land. Upon such soil it makes a most satisfactory growth and fruitage, and much less labor is required to keep the weeds and grass down, as the ground is not impregnated with foul seed. This immunity of new ground, compared to old land, from weed and grass infestation is a most important factor not only in strawberry culture, but in all gardening or trucking operations.

Creating a Food Supply.

Burbank has estimated that a single kernel of grain added to each sheaf of wheat grown would be sufficient to supply the navy of a civilized country. It is well known that he has done more than this. He has in most of his products generally doubled their production. In this connection what makes his cactus immensely valuable to the stockman is that it can be grown and need not be used for fodder for two or three years and when cut is just as good as ever.

Setting Posts.

Any timber will last quite well if set in this way: Dig a square hole about a foot deep, throwing the dirt well back. Sharpen the post and drive well into the bottom. Then put a flat stone against each side and a chunk against the post, the boards holding it the other way. This prevents their rotting off at the surface of the ground, as they always do.

How to Preserve Eggs.

When eggs are only required to be preserved for two or three months they keep very well packed in dry salt or bran. The meat of the egg may shrink and rattle within the shell when shaken, but its edibility is not impaired. Coating the egg with vaseline or butter will also keep it for a short time, or any application which effectively seals the pores of the shell and excludes air will prolong the freshness of eggs. If the egg is even momentarily submerged in boiling water the albumen thereby becomes sufficiently coagulated to prevent the entrance of air. In some of the rural districts in England and Scotland eggs for home consumption are smutted over with a mixture of sulphur and lampblack, a cheap and effective preservative. But the limewater mixture is best for general purposes.

How to Make Bib Aprons.

An excellent way of making children's bib aprons is by using the regular yoke pattern, cutting the back deep enough so that a narrow piece of the goods comes under the arm. Instead of the same depth yoke in front, cut the material as long as the child's dress, rounding the goods at the side if you prefer. Join the back yoke to the front piece; cut the sleeves and sew in; face the yoke, neck and sides with bias strips of the material. Two buttons will be sufficient for the back. When finished you will have a bib that not only entirely covers the front of the child's dress, but also protects the sleeves.

How to Clean a Light Wool Skirt.

To clean a light wool skirt take one pail of warm soft water. To this add one pint of gasoline and one-quarter bar of naphtha soap dissolved. Put the skirt to be washed into this and wash carefully. Rinse in water the same temperature as water used in washing the skirt. This is an excellent method and never fails to make the skirt look like new.

LOEB'S NEW POLICE.

Customs Collector's Force to Seize Smugglers at New York.

SEVERAL HAVE BEEN CAUGHT

Forty-eight Piers Are Watched Night and Day to Prevent Smuggling In of Contraband Goods—Colonel W. Lutz, Commander, Has Two Hundred and Seventy-five Men on Duty.

Every pier of New York city at which is tied a vessel containing dutiable goods is being watched night and day by a new federal police force to apprehend smugglers. This force was organized a few days ago as the outcome of Collector William Loeb's determination to stop leaks in the collection of customs revenue. Within six days an average of two smugglers a night were detected and the goods they sought to smuggle through free of duty confiscated.

There are 275 men in the new force. Colonel W. Lutz, former chief of the insular police force of Porto Rico, has been named as commandant. His assistant is A. M. Beardsley.

There are three lieutenants, twelve roundsmen and 260 patrolmen or watchmen, as they are officially designated. The men are divided into three shifts of eight hours each. The greater number of men are on duty from 8 a. m. to 4 p. m., a lesser number from 4 p. m. to midnight, and a still smaller number from midnight until 8 a. m. There is at least one man to every pier in the city where a vessel is tied containing dutiable goods.

New Force Gets Busy.

The new department was formally organized July 21. Colonel Lutz got his patrolmen busy at once. In eight instances they caught members of the crews of different steamers trying to take ashore packages containing goods on which no duty had been paid. A valuable lace spread, a number of finely wrought fancy boxes, a valuable jewel case and boxes of cigars and bottles of lay rum were among the finds. In every case they were being brought ashore when it was supposed the customs officials had gone for the day.

Never before in the history of the customs service has a watch been kept at night. The steamship companies have always had watchmen at piers. At least they were supposed to watch, but according to general report they were either asleep or oblivious to what any of the crew might bring ashore.

There will be strict discipline maintained of the new force in order to demonstrate that its organization and operation may prove its usefulness. The roundsmen will be held accountable for the detection of delinquent patrolmen at piers where one man is assigned on the midnight shifts. The lieutenants will make unexpected trips to see that their immediate subordinates are really making the proper rounds.

Forty-eight Piers Watched.

The force until recently had under surveillance forty-eight piers. It is stated that the force will be increased to 500 patrolmen just as soon as it can be done.

The members of the newly organized force are all clothed with the "S. S. S." authority, as Colonel Lutz terms it. This means that they have the police and governmental right to "stop, search, seize." The watchmen are instructed to take no chances, but seize on suspicion if there is the slightest thing to warrant such suspicion. It is expected that hundreds of thousands of dollars will be added to the treasury by this increased vigilance before it will become generally understood that there is no use trying to leave a dock or pier with dutiable goods. When that particular time arrives Colonel Lutz says he will reduce the force somewhat, but never to the point where a pier is not covered by at least one man constantly.

Colonel Lutz had several hundred police under him in Porto Rico for ten years. The body was organized after the fashion of the new federal force he commands. All below the rank of major in the insular police force were natives. During the labor strike on the island three years ago Colonel Lutz gained a reputation for his energetic "preservation of order."—New York World.

ROCK ROADS AND FARMS.

Missouri Farmer Tells of the Advantages of Macadam Highways.

Elijah Carel, who owns farms in Jackson and Clay counties, Mo., is very much in favor of rock roads. He lives three miles west of Blue Springs on a macadam highway and says it is hard to estimate their value to farmers.

"If I were going to buy another farm in Clay county I would pay $20 an acre more for the same land on a rock road than away from that kind of a road," Mr. Carel said. "If Clay county farmers once lived on a rock road and realized its worth to them they would not hesitate to pay $10 an acre for the improvement. Over in Jackson county we can haul big loads to market at any time when the markets are the highest and when we could not get there at all on dirt roads. It is a great satisfaction and a pleasure, too, to know that we can get over the roads well at any time we may desire to go. When the Clay county farmers get rock roads their only regret will be that they didn't get them sooner."

Mr. Carel paid $80 an acre for 9 feet of 10 miles in Jackson county and five years ago and has refused $125 an acre several times for it since. He believes it is easily worth $150 an acre because of the rock road. All of which is some different from $100 in Clay county—the same distance from Kansas City.

PRIEST FOR GOOD ROADS.

Smooth Highways In a Missouri County Preached by Father Placid.

Headed by Father Placid, superior of the Conception monastery at Conception, Mo., in Nodaway county, the township board of Jefferson township has put fifty-six of the seventy-eight miles of road in the township under a system of dragging contracts. Farmers have been secured who will drag the roads as often as required by the supervisors at rates running from 50 cents to 75 cents a mile. A dragging consists, under the contracts recently let, of two rounds, or four trips over.

When the plan was started Father Placid, accompanied by the township board, visited all the main traveled roads of the township and selected the sections which were in need of grading and would need such improvement before dragging could be effectively started. The various supervisors were then ordered to have these sections graded.

It is expected that after the grading is completed it will cost an average of $65 a mile yearly to maintain the roads in good shape. Father Placid in a sermon delivered at the monastery urged his auditors to aid the good roads movement.

Monkey's Great Grief.

Grief over the death of Dr. Monroe S. Leach a few days ago caused the suicide of the physician's pet monkey, which refused to touch food after its master died. It succumbed the other day. When Dr. Leach was taken ill the monkey took up its post at the sickbed and refused to leave. On the day the physician died, it is declared by members of the family, the animal whimpered like a child. At the funeral the monkey was permitted to look for the last time on the face of its dead master. With shrill, almost human, cries it clung to the casket, and it was necessary to pull it away.

Real Butterflies For Hatpins.

A new enterprise in which the youth of Palouse, Wash., ranging from five to twelve years of age, are engaging is catching butterflies. The insects are delivered at a confectionery store, where they are chloroformed and sent to a plating company in Spokane, Wash., to be metallized and made into hatpins. Five cents each is paid, and dozens of little people are to be seen with their nets scouring the hills about Palouse.

How to Destroy Potato Bugs.

Place boards here and there among the potato vines and on them lay slices of raw potatoes. The bugs will go for them and can be destroyed. In a week's time, after a daily slaughter, no bugs will be in sight. It might be well to use paris green on the potato slices, thus saving the work of killing the bugs.

PRIZES FOR GOOD ROADS.

New Scheme In Maryville, Mo., to Encourage Building Five Mile Sections.

Maryville, Mo., will attempt to solve the good roads proposition in a new way. At a recent meeting of the Maryville Commercial club it was decided to formulate a plan to give four prizes aggregating $750 for the four best five mile stretches of road leading into Maryville.

No matter how far out the five mile section may be, just so it is connected to a complete five mile section which touches the city limits or to a section which touches such continuous section it will be eligible for prizes. The sections thus competing must be kept in order for one year.

An aeroplane which made a successful fly of 400 feet at Traverse City last week, so it is reported, is the invention of Charles Agustine, aged 22, of that city. The model worked so well that a company of local people will furnish financial aid to construct a large power machine.

A big automobile loaded with members of the "Holy Rollers" sect was in town Friday, while driving from their camp near Traverse City to the settlement west of Honor. Richard Silver aged 82, of Acme, near Traverse City, probably the oldest showman in the United States, is dead. He started out in the show business when a boy of 12, and later traveled all over the country and Canada at the head of the Silver family, continuing until he was well along in years, and then settling on a farm at Acme. His sons have followed his example and are well known over this section of the state. This is the first death to occur in the family.

A resident of the northern part of western Michigan, recently put himself on record as follows: "We have many fine buildings, well improved farms, large orchards, and the convenience of telephone and rural delivery. We raise successfully—oats, wheat, barley, rye, corn and potatoes, in fact all grains and root crops that may be grown in our climate. We have good roads, churches and school houses. We raise immense crops and potatoes in this country and they will average a yield of from 100 to 250 bushels per acre. Hay does exceptionally well on these lands as well as in this part of state. There are still many thousands of acres awaiting the coming of new settlers. We have a hearty welcome for all home-seekers and will lend a willing hand to help those who come to get themselves established."

For some time it has appeared in Harbor Springs that some of the "near beer" that was being sold was so "near" that it produced a jag just like the real thing, and the Quaker beer made some fellows quake so they couldn't keep their legs under them. Last Friday Sheriff Jones and Deputies Bond, Edgerton and Tracy, armed with a search warrant issued by W. B. Smith, searched the soft drink parlor operated on the corner of State and Main streets by A. R. Alldorfer, and found a quanity of what has all the appearance of being beer and whiskey, and Alldorfer was placed under arrest on a warrant sworn out by Sheriff Jones, and he will have to stand trial in the January term of circuit court on a charge of violating the local option law.

While there has been very little drunkenness in Harbor Springs this summer, to the close observer it has been evident that someone was violating the law, but respectable law abiding citizens are insisting that the laws shall be obeyed, and there is no reason why the will of the people should not be respected in this matter.

In the town of Vanderbelt a few miles south of Cheboygan, is located the headquarters of Yuill Bros., one of the most extensive lumbering concerns in Michigan. The firm started in a small way a few years ago but now are the owners of a large tract of standing timber in Cheboygan, Otsego, and Montmorency counties, own and operate two logging railroads with twenty-five miles of track and equipped with two engines and the necessary rolling stock for handling logs etc., operate a sawmill at Logan about two miles south of Vanderbilt and a portable mill on one of the logging roads. They own the entire town of Logan where they have a general store. They have in their employ in the mills, woods and operating the railroads, over 350 men. The firm have sufficient standing timber in that vicinity to last them 15 years and in addition to this they have larger holdings in the upper peninsula.

Their mills this season turned out 15,000,000 feet of lumber which is shipped by rail over the Michigan Central. They are also large shippers of hemlock bark.

They have already commenced lumbering operations for the coming season and their output will be the same as last season. This firm is really the main stay of the thriving little town of Vanderbilt.—Cheboygan News.

A BADGE OF HONOR

A business man of Columbus, Ga., writes to Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, president of Georgia W. C. T. U., relating an incident which, he says reveals how far reaching are the influence and teachings of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, and how they are being indoctrinated into the standard of citizenship of men of affairs. We quote the letter almost in full:

"The occasion was a gathering of representative business men who had come together from every state in the south Atlantic group and from as far west as Arkansas. These men represented a vast amount of capital, and they were gathered to discuss financial problems and to devise ways and means for building up their interests."

"After deliberating questions of vital importance, a recess was taken and it was proposed by a gentleman in the party that we accept the cordial invitation of a 'Social Club' to visit their rooms and partake of some 'refreshments.' Before the gentleman had finished speaking, he glanced over the circle of listeners, and his eye rested on the bow of white ribbon which I had the honor to wear. He at once modified his suggestion, and said that because of the insignia worn by one of the company, he would withdraw the proposition, as he could not afford to offer disrespect to the badge which stood for the purity and love of our mothers and sisters; neither would he dare propose anything that would be a seeming affront to one who stood as sponsor for a band of loyal women who had accomplished so much for the nation. The others concurred in his views, and I felt more honored than had I been the recipient of an invitation as the guest of honor at some great banquet. I was conscious of a peculiar influence which grew out of this little white ribbon, which has been a protectorate in its mute appeal for the honor of our homes."

"The lesson learned is to those who wear this little emblem, that its appeal be a tornfication behind which the young and old may be shielded from the thoughtless offer to indulge in a practise which has been the starting point in the downfall of so many promising men."

"God is hearing the prayers of his children, the day of deliverance is near at hand. His unconquerable hosts are advancing with the force of an avalanche to crush the monster that has been legalized to destroy our civilization."

"Lead on, O you white ribboners, until the cry of VICTORY shall echo and re echo and the world."

[illegible]

"Well," answered the other, "[illegible]"

"What more is there to say?"

"That remark might be self made always requires explanation as to whether it is a brag or an apology."—Washington Star.

DIRT ROAD IMPROVER

Wonderful Change Made by Using the Split Log Drag.

DIRECT, EFFECTIVE RESULTS.

Dragging a Road When Muddy Fills In Ruts and Closes Up Uneven Spaces—Persistent Use of Drag Will Soon Make a Smooth, Hard Surface.

It has been said that only 10 per cent of the roads in the entire United States are the main traveled highways. The other 90 per cent are the common, everyday country dirt roads. In the ordinary discussion regarding road improvement our thoughts and energies so frequently lead us to the discussion of macadamized roads, brick, stone and other specially constructed roadbeds that the vast majority of our dirt roads are lost sight of. We talk about the necessity for road rollers and road scrapers, rock crushers and various other essential roadmaking devices, and then when we figure out the cost of such roads at from $3,000 to $15,000 per mile we oftentimes wonder how many generations it will take for our dirt roads to be adequately maintained according to the best systems. Because of the utter hopelessness of getting macadamized or other expensive improved roads in his locality in Missouri a man named D. Ward King built a drag out of a log split in half some thirteen years ago, and after every rain, while the mud was wet, he drove it up and down the road in front of his farm for half a mile, pulling the drag at an angle of forty-five degrees. Such marvelous improvement resulted from the use of this primitive device that scientific investigation by road engineers has been instigated, and the matter has now passed beyond the experimental or guesswork stage.

The 90 per cent of our dirt roads in the United States, properly dragged after a rain, can be made almost as satisfactory during the greater part of the year as expensively hard surfaced highways and at a ridiculously small cost per mile, carrying from $5 to $100. In the light of the impossibility of macadamizing all our 2,000,000 miles of roads in the United States in one generation or even in any limited period of time, and in the light of the effective and immediate results obtained from dragging the highways, the study of this method can be followed with much profit.

First of all, dragging a road when muddy fills in the ruts, chops up uneven spaces and makes a smooth surface. Of course traffic over such a road will immediately proceed to cut it up again. However, as the dragging is persisted in and the mud is worked into a clayey-like mass and becomes dry it likewise becomes hard. Eventually the top of the road presents a resistant, shell-like coat of tough mud as hard as unburnt brick.

After a time it will be noticed that a road that has been dragged will become dry much sooner than neglected stretches of road in the same neighborhood. The more attention given to dragging a road the quicker will it dry out ahead of its neighbors. Eventually after several years of persistent dragging the mud shell on the surface of such a road will become so hard that even after a cloudburst of rain a pick will with difficulty be made to penetrate the surface for over two inches.

By the skillful use of the drag the road can be made high in the middle. The average neglected country road is usually hollow in the middle and after a rain has small lakes and pools standing over its surface, sometimes for many days and weeks. But the dragged road, having such a crown, sheds water into the side gutters.

These facts to the uninitiated or skeptical may on first impression seem farfetched or exaggerated, but they are facts based on the experience of reputable men from Missouri to New York state who have been dragging the country dirt roads after every rain.

The roads today in many sections of the United States are no better than they were fifty years ago, even with the labor and money that have been expended upon them. In some localities almost the entire amount of the tax is expended in temporary work, while nothing is spent for permanent improvement, with the result that conditions remain unchanged. The sooner we can get a system of road dragging inaugurated in every community the sooner will we have the 90 per cent of our neglected dirt roads adequately and permanently improved throughout the greater part of the year in the United States.—Donald McCaskey, M. D.

WHAT ONE COMMUNITY DID.

Result of Road Dragging by the Farmers at Cameron, Mo.

In view of the general awakening for good roads I will tell the farmers who are interested of the wonderful improvement that has been brought about in dirt roads by persistent use of the road drag. In 1902 the writer conceived the idea that the farmers in the vicinity of Cameron, Mo., should have the benefit of rural free delivery. The idea was ridiculed, but persistence won. The first carrier that left the Cameron postoffice was accompanied by a brass band over the entire route, and every farmer that had prepared his mail box for the free delivery was "serenaded." This created an interest. But our roads were in a miserable condition, full of mudholes and deep ruts.

At the suggestion of Postmaster Fil son we held a "good roads" picnic in Cameron for the purpose of emphasizing the necessity of good roads in order to secure the rural free delivery. The meeting was addressed by D. Ward King, the "evangel of good roads in Missouri," who explained the value of the King drag, and other speakers. Of the thousands who attended the picnic many pledged themselves to a conscientious use of the drag. As a result we have now in place of mudholes and ruts well rounded, level solid roads in all this vicinity. We have eight rural carriers out of Cameron instead of the one we secured with a brass band, and since that event land values have more than doubled in this locality. Now even the renters have caught the spirit of the good roads movement, and there is no doubt that the voluntary dragging of the roads will be kept up.—James Williams in Kansas City Star.

A Doctor's Road Work.

Practicing his profession in the country districts of Lancaster county, Va., oftentimes getting stuck in the mud and bumping through chuck holes, Dr. Dugald McCaskey and his hired man built a drag with the help of the local blacksmith, and the doctor himself drove the drag through the spring months of 1906. He not only repaired a half mile of neglected impassable yellow clay road, but he made it like a race track, as smooth as a boulevard. Skeptics, knockers and "hard shell" citizens, tied to the prehistoric methods of "our great-great-grandfathers' days," have had the scales dropped from their eyes and have become converted by what they have seen. The road dragging plan has since taken hold of entire Lancaster county with increasing power and benefit for good roads. Farmers all over the county are building drags and using them. The one verdict they pronounce upon the effect on dirt roads is: "Why did we not know of this drag plan before? It was a wonderful transformation."—Nation's Stockman and Farmer.

SELLING OSAGE LANDS

Oklahoma's Last Indian Reservation Opened to Settlers.

GREAT NATIVE WILDERNESS.

Picturesque Hills and Prairies of the Osage Country Allotted In Severalty and Thereby Opened to the Influx of the White Man—How the Land May Be Sold.

If there are persons who love the Osage Indian reservation for its streams, its hills, its forests and its broad prairies and feel the charm of its history and traditions and look upon it as almost the last remaining expanse of native wilderness, they should hasten to look upon it, as the old things and the old ways are soon to vanish forever. The lands, to which the Osages have fee simple title, have finally been allotted in severalty and each Osage citizen has been given title to his allotment.

Old Villages Still In Use.

This does not mean that the Osages have abandoned their village camp life and are living on their individual lands. As a matter of fact the Osage lands generally are lying wild as they have since the beginning of time. Allotment, however, means the incoming of the white farmer with his industry and the turning of the grass grown, flower strewn acres into productive fields. Such lands as the Osage citizen cannot sell he will rent, and to that extent the entire reservation will be placed within reach of the white man.

There are 2,230 certified allottees in the Osage tribe, of which any one who failed to get his share of lands will be paid an equivalent in money. Each Osage has 657 acres of land. At first he was allowed to make three separate selections of 160 acres, any one of which he was permitted to designate as his homestead, to be inalienable for twenty-five years. Then he took a fourth selection of 160 acres or a total of 640.

After the bestowal of all these riches it was found that there still remained untaken land of which the allotment commission made a per capita distribution amounting to seventeen acres.

Already white men are gathering on the horizon of the Osage country to spy out its resources and possibilities and real estate agents are opening offices in the different towns to engage in land traffic. It will be possible for an Osage citizen to sell all his land save his 160 acre homestead under certain conditions. He may rent all his land for grazing or agricultural purposes. The sale of his surplus land or that in excess of his homestead and amounting to 437 acres will be permitted in two ways.

Ways of Selling the Land.

One is that he may receive from the secretary of the interior a certificate of competency to manage his own affairs. For this certificate 175 Osage citizens have made application, of which twenty-eight have been submitted to the secretary of the interior, who approved twenty-five. The filing of applications will move more rapidly in a month or two, the secretary having asked that further applications be withheld until he has finished issuing the deeds to the surplus lands. All the homestead deeds are ready for delivery.

The surplus lands of the full bloods and the incompetents may be sold upon application of the secretary of the interior is convinced that the sale would be for the benefit of the owner.

The latter would be permitted to spend the money from the sale of his surplus lands only in such manner as would be approved by the commissioner of Indian affairs.—Pawhuska (Okla.) Cor. Kansas City Star.

nally, "May I be permitted to proceed?"

"Rather queer legal advice, 'pon my word."

"Please let him explain," put in Mrs. Browne, whose sense of humor was strongly attracted by this time. "If there is anything more to be learned concerning matrimony I'd like to know it."

"Yes, Mr Saunders, you may proceed," said Lady Agnes, passing a hand over her bewildered eyes.

"Thank you, my lady. Well, here it is in a nutshell: I have not spoken of it before, but you and Mr Browne can very easily comply with the provisions of the will. You can be married at any time. Now, I"—

"And where do I come in?" demanded Deppingham sarcastically.

"Yes, and I?" added Mrs. Browne. "You forget us, Mr Saunders."

"I include Mrs. Browne," ascended Deppingham. "Are we to be assassinated? By Jove, clever idea of yours, Saunders! Simplifies matters tremendously."

"I hear no objection from the heirs," remarked Saunders meaningly, whereupon Lady Agnes and Bobby came out of their stupor and protested vigorously.

"Miss Pelham," said Britt, breaking in sharply, "I trust you are getting all of this down. I wish to warn you ladies and gentlemen, that I expect to overthrow the will on the ground that there is insanity on both sides. You'll oblige me by uttering just what you feel."

"My plan—is very simple," began Saunders helplessly.

"Damned simple," growled Deppingham.

"We are living on an island where polygamy is practised and tolerated. Why can't we take advantage of the custom and beat the natives at their own game? That's the ticket!"

Of course this proposition, simple as it sounded, brought forth a storm of laughter and expostulation, but Saunders held his ground.

"You have only to embrace Mohammedanism—or paganism, or whatever it is, temporarily—just long enough to get married and comply with the terms. Then, I dare say, you could resume your Christian doctrine once more, after a few weeks, I'd say, and the case is won."

"I pay Lady Deppingham the compliment by saying that it would be most difficult for me to become a Christian again," said Browne smoothly, bowing to the flushed Englishwoman.

"How very sweet of you!" she said, with a grimace which made Drusilla shiver with annoyance.

"You don't need to live together, of course," floundered Saunders, getting rather beyond his depth.

"Well, that's a concession on your part," said Mrs. Browne, a flash in her eye.

"I never heard of such an asinine proposition," sputtered Deppingham. Saunders went completely under at that.

"On the other hand," he hastened to remark, "I'm sure it would be quite legal if you did live to"—

"Stop him, for heaven's sake!" screamed Lady Agnes, bursting into uncontrollable laughter.

"Stop him? Why?" demanded her husband, suddenly seeing what he regarded as a rare joke. "Let's hear him out. By Jove, there's more to it than I thought. Go on, Saunders."

"Of course if you are going to be nasty about it"—began Saunders in a huff.

"I can't see anything nasty about it," said Browne. "I'll admit that our wife and our husband may decide to be stubborn and unreasonable, but it sounds rather attractive to me."

"Robert!" from his wife.

"He's only joking, Mrs. Browne," explained Deppingham magnanimously. "Now, let me understand you, Saunders. You say they can be married according to the customs—which, I take it, are the laws—of the islanders. Your plan provides Browne with two charming wives and gives me but one. There's nothing to compel Mrs. Browne to marry me."

"But, my lord," said Saunders, "doesn't the plan give Lady Deppingham two husbands? It's quite a fair division."

"It would make Lord Deppingham my husband-in-law, I imagine," said Drusilla quaintly. "I've always had a horror of husbands-in-law."

"And you would be my wife-in-law," supplemented Lady Agnes. "How interesting!"

"Saunders," said Deppingham soberly, "I must oppose your plan. It's quite unfair to two innocent and unadvised parties. What have we done that we should be exempt from polygamy?"

"You are not exempt!" exclaimed the harassed solicitor. "You are merely not obliged to; that's all. You can do as you choose about it. I'm sure I'm sorry my plan causes so much levity. It is no use for the good of our cause. The will doesn't say how many wives Mr. Browne shall have. It simply says that Agnes Ruthven shall be his wife. He isn't restricted, you know. He can be a polygamist if he likes."

"You're right," said Britt. "The will doesn't specify. But, my dear Saunders, you are overlooking your own salient point in this plan."

"I don't quite understand, Mr. Britt."

"As I understand the laws on this island—the church laws, at least—a man can have as many wives as he likes. Well, that's all very well for Mr Browne. But isn't it also a fact that a woman can have no more than one husband? Lady Deppingham has one husband. She can't take another without first getting rid of this one."

"Saunders," said Deppingham, arising and lighting a fresh cigarette, "you have gone clean daft. You're loony with love. You've got marriage on the brain. I'd advise you to take some one for it."

"Do you mean that for me, Lord Deppingham?" demanded Miss Pelham sharply. She glared at him and then slammed her notebook on the table. "You can josh Mr Saunders, but you can't josh me. I'm sick of this job. Get somebody else to do your work after this. I'm through."

"Oh!" exclaimed every one. In a panic. It took nearly ten minutes to pacify the ruffled siren grappler.

"Perhaps we could arrange for a divorce all round," cried Saunders, suddenly inspired.

"On what grounds?" laughed Browne.

"Give us a clue," said the lawyer.

"It's barely possible that there is no divorce law in Japan," remarked Britt, enjoying his confrere's misery.

"Are you quite sure?"

"Reasonably. If there was such a law I'll bet my head two-thirds of the men in Arutat would be getting rid of their wives before night."

"I'm tired," said Lady Deppingham suddenly. She yawned and stretched her arms. "It's been very entertaining, Saunders, but really I think we'd better dress for dinner. Come, Mr Browne. Shall we look for the princess?"

"With pleasure, if you'll promise to spare Deppingham's life."

"On condition that you will spare Deppingham's wife," very prettily and airily. Mrs. Browne laughed with amazing good grace, but there was a new expression in her eyes.

"Your ladyship," called Saunders desperately, "do you approve of my plan? It's only a subterfuge"—

"Heartily!" she exclaimed, with one of her rarest laughs. "The only objection that I can see to it is that it leaves out my husband and Mrs. Browne. They are very nice people, Saunders, and you should be more considerate of them. Come, Mr Browne." She took the American's arm and gayly danced from the room. Lord Deppingham's eyes glowed with pride in his charming wife as he followed with the heartsick Drusilla.

"I would have won them over if Britt had not interfered," almost wailed little Mr. Saunders, his eyes glazed with mortification.

Geneva gaily waved her handkerchief.

"I'm getting to hate that man," said Miss Pelham loyally. "And the others!—They give me a pain! Don't mind them, Tommy, dear."

Lady Deppingham and Browne came upon the princess quite unexpectedly. She was in the upper gallery, leaning against the stone rail and gazing steadily through the lidglasses in the direction of the bungalow. They held back and watched her, unseen. The soft light of early evening fell upon her figure as she stood erect, lithe and sinuous, in the open space between the ivy clad posts.

Geneva smiled securely in her supposed aloofness from the world. Then, suddenly moved by a strange impulse, she gently waved her handkerchief as if in greeting to some one far off in the gloaming. The action was a mischievous one, no doubt, and it had its consequences—rather sudden and startling, if the observers were to judge by her subsequent movements. She lowered the glass instantly. There was a quick catch in her breath, as if a laugh had been checked; confusion swept over her, and she drew back into the shadows, as a guilty child might have done. They distinctly heard her murmur as she crossed the flags and disappeared through the French window without seeing them:

"Oh, dear, what a crazy thing to do!"

Geneva, peering through the glasses, had discovered the figure of Chase on the bungalow porch. She was amused to find that he, from his distant post, was also regarding the chateau through a pair of glasses. A spirit of adventure, risk, rebellion, as uncontrolled as breath itself, impelled her to flaunt her [illegible]. That mischievous spirit deserted her most shamelessly when her startled eyes saw that he was waving a response. She lay awake for a long time that night wondering what he would think of her for that wretched bit of frivolity. Then at last a new thought came to her relief, but it did not give her the peace of mind that she desired.

He may have mistaken her for Lady Deppingham.

Votes for the Women in Denver

"It was a decided mistake to give women the right of the ballot," says a woman politician of Denver, in The Woman's Home Companion for November. "But now that they have it, in my belief it is as much the duty of a woman to exercise that right as it is for her to observe her religious duties or to take proper care of her home. The average woman is better than the average man. At least that is my observation. The average woman politician is as bad as the average man politician—only she is worse! If the rank and file of women would join in one concentrated movement to uproot both the professional man and the professional woman politician, then the right of franchise vested in woman would prove a boon of inestimable value.

"Like many another woman I entered politics with the idea of purifying the political atmosphere. Since then it has been a constant struggle on my part to keep my skirts clean. It is much the same thing as a woman marrying a man to reform him. In nine cases out of ten he draws her down to his own level instead of being lifted to hers.

"Women, generally speaking, vote to please the men. There are those who will take issue with this statement, but it is nevertheless true. Perhaps it may be different after the women are better educated to political affairs, if that time should ever come, but under existing conditions the women vote as the men suggest. Left to themselves and uninfluenced by the men, the woman vote would be chaotic. We wouldn't know where we stood to in an election till after the votes were all in, because women are influenced by all manner of things the ordinary mortal would not reckon with. By way of example, a really handsome man is a strong asset for any political ticket in Colorado!

"Women are by nature of a trusting disposition in everything save love affairs. It is therefore an easy task for the men to control their votes. For that reason in planning a campaign we decide upon candidates and principles that will appeal to the men and then leave it to them to win their wives, mothers, sisters or sweethearts over to their views."

Murder Will Out.

In a county seat in one of the middle western states dwelt a lawyer who, after a practice of thirty years, had accumulated a competence and retired. Being a man of much more than ordinary ability, an excellent speaker, entertaining decided political views and enjoying the confidence of the community, he was urged by his friends to run for congress. He refused. In vain they pointed out the fact that a nomination would be equivalent to an election and pledged themselves to secure his nomination. He would not listen to them. A man high in the political councils of the state came to see him and added his persuasion.

"You ought to take that office," he said. "It might lead to something higher. You would make a national reputation."

"That's what I am afraid of."

"What do you mean by that?"

"Well," answered the lawyer hesitatingly, "I will tell you, but it is in strict confidence. It must not go any further. Many years ago, when I was young and inexperienced, I published a small volume of original poetry. So far as I know there is not a copy of that book in existence now, but one would turn up in some corner of the world if I were to run for office, and the papers would print extracts from it. I wouldn't have that happen for a million dollars. No, sir, nothing doing!"—Youth's Companion.

The Secret of Holding a Successful Auction Sale

The SEASON of auctions will soon be here and during the next four months many dollars worth of farm property will be sold at public sales in the COURIER'S territory.

The prices at all these sales will depend on various circumstances and conditions, but they will depend largely on how the sale is advertised. A sale insufficiently advertised cannot possibly produce the BEST results. A SALE WELL ADVERTISED will always succeed, unless the weather prevents holding it.

The New and the Old Way

In the old days when circulations were small and it was impossible to reach all the people through the newspapers, it was necessary to use auction bills. But that day is gone by. Advertising is so cheap and so wonderfully effective that the auction bill is rapidly becoming a back number.

In this territory the use of advertising space in The COURIER is rapidly superseding auction bills.

Why is this?

The REASON Why

THE BILL reaches only a few hundred; The COURIER reaches thousands of readers.

THE BILL covers only a limited section; The COURIER covers a large territory thoroughly.

THE BILL is seen only by the people when they are away from home; The COURIER goes into their homes and finds them.

THE BILL is not seen in bad weather because the people stay at home; that is just the time The COURIER is read more carefully.

THE BILL makes the busy man stop when he is in a hurry in the wind and cold, and maybe take out his spectacles; The COURIER finds him at home, in a comfortable chair leisurely reading his paper.

THE BILL must be tacked up and distributed a day or two of hard work for a man with a rig. The COURIER distributes the same information to nearly every house all at the same time without trouble or extra cost.

The Great Auction Paper

Remember, it is not enough to simply put your ad. in some newspaper. It must be in a paper that reaches the PEOPLE YOU WISH TO INTEREST IN YOUR SALE, and one which covers the WHOLE TERRITORY. It is astonishing how far men will go to attend a sale and bid on some particular property advertised. These are the very men you want to reach, for they come to do business and not from curiosity.

You Have Only One Chance

Bear in mind that all your goods are going to be sold in ONE day, and on that day depends whether you make or lose perhaps several hundred dollars. A few dollars expense is absolutely nothing at all compared with the importance of advertising your sale RIGHT.

You Cannot Take Chances on Scrimping Your Advertising

How to Hold a Successful Auction

If you are interested in auction sales write or ask the COURIER for free proof of what COURIER advertising will do.

We have advertised scores of sales the modern way and have not had ONE dissatisfied customer. Doesn't that mean something?

A New Back for an Old One. How it Can be Done in Charlevoix

The back aches at times with a dull indescribable feeling, making you weary and restless; piercing pains shoot across the region of the kidneys, and again the loins are so lame to stoop is agony. No use to rub or apply a plaster to the back in this condition. You cannot reach the cause. Exchange the bad back for a new and stronger one. Charlevoix residents would do well to profit by the following example.

Mrs. C. E. Clapp, 937 Front street, Traverse City, Mich., says: "I can strongly recommend Doan's Kidney Pills, having used them with the best of results. Last spring I had a severe attack of kidney trouble and I was made miserable by dull, nagging backaches. My kidneys pained me and there were other symptoms of kidney trouble in evidence. Doan's Kidney Pills did me a world of good, relieving my aches and pains and strengthening my kidneys, in fact, making a general improvement. Other members of my family have taken this remedy and it has had the same good effect in each case."

Why He Married Her.

"Out of the strong came forth sweetness" might be said of many famous soldiers. That Lord Lawrence of Indian fame enjoyed an earthly paradise in his home may be seen by the following anecdote: His lordship was sitting in his drawing room at Southgate, with his sister and others of the family, all engaged in reading. Looking up from his book, in which he had been engrossed, he discovered that his wife had left the room. "Where's mother?" said he to one of his daughters. "She's upstairs," replied the girl. He returned to his book and, looking up again a few minutes later, put the same question to his daughter and received the same answer. Once more he returned to his reading; once more he looked up with the same question on his lips. His sister broke in, "Why, really, John, it would seem as if you could not get on five minutes without your wife." "That's why I married her," he replied. To this admirable woman Lawrence whispered with his dying breath, "To the last gasp, my darling."—London Chronicle.

Strange Capture of a Salmon.

Fishing a well known river in Norway one June, one of the tenants of the fishing lodge opposite ours caught a fish of twenty-nine pounds in the morning and lost another, his spinning line being broken by the rush of a heavy fish. Fishing with prawn the afternoon of the same day, the same angler in the same pool got into a good fish at his first cast. After a long fight the fish was gaffed and landed. Then was revealed a strange state of things. The prawn tackle had never touched the fish; in fact, the hooks were a foot or more from it. They had caught in the trace which had been lost that morning and was now twisted into knots and tangles no doubt by the salmon endeavoring to get rid of the treble Norsk cast and hooks. The line had been got rid of. As the prawn swung down the pool it had grappled the lost cast still attached to the salmon, and fish (thirty-three pounds), cast and tackle were recovered. We watched the incident from the road and, crossing the river, handled the recovered cast. Many maintain that salmon once hooked and played for any length of time leave the pool.—W. A Blunder.

(Original.)

When I left home for Miss Harmon's school for girls my father lived in Illinois. When I was graduated he had removed to Bankton, N. Y. He gave me the street and number, but he was a lawyer, and lawyers were in those days proverbial for their wretched handwriting, so I found it difficult to make out the address. As near as I could come to deciphering the name of the street it was Lafayette. This was not correct. It was Sabelle street. Leaving the station on my arrival, I took a cab and told the driver to take me to 50 Lafayette street. When I saw the house I was surprised that my father could afford to live in it. I had left a two story frame cottage in the west to come to a four story stone front house in the east.

I paid the coachman and, going up the stoop, rang the bell. A maid came to the door whom I had never seen, and I told her to tell mother that I had come from school. She asked me whom she should say had come. I told her "her daughter, of course," and, going into the drawing room, looked about me at the handsome furniture, still wondering how father had been able to purchase it. The maid went upstairs to make the announcement.

I waited quite a long while for her return. When she came down she told me that no one was at home except my mother, who had recently had a cataract removed from one of her eyes and was obliged to remain in a dark room. I was surprised, for I had not been informed of there being anything the matter with her eye, and as the maid said I was to go up to her I ran upstairs and through a room that had been darkened so that one entering my mother's room should not let in any light. The chamber occupied by my mother was so dark that I could scarcely see my hand before my face. I didn't know which way to turn till she called me, and even then I went in the wrong direction till she had done so several times. Then I found her sitting in an easy chair and put my arms around her neck.

"Why, child," she said, "why did you write as that you would come tomorrow? Your brother would have met you at the station."

I was startled. My mother's voice had changed. Could it be that her trouble with her eye had broken her faculties.

"There's some mistake about that, mother dear," I replied. "I wrote that I was coming on Thursday. Thursday and Friday by a bad writer may be made to look alike. Perhaps there's where the error lies."

I was about to speak of her trouble when I heard the door of the anteroom open and shut. Then the door of the room I was in opened, some one hurried in, and a man's voice said:

"Where are you, sis?"

"I'm here."

"Ellen told me you'd come, and come a day ahead of time."

My brother Tom, ten years my senior, never called me anything but "sis" and "sissy," but there was something wrong with his voice. I had no time to wonder what had caused the change when I felt myself clasped in two strong arms and lips pressed against mine.

"What's become of your beard?" I asked.

"Beard! I never had one. We've been counting on your coming. Mother is shut up for the present, but she'll come out all right. The doctor says she may have the light in one week more. Awful glad to see you—I mean to feel you, ha, ha! Can't see anything in here. Have to rely on the touch." And he gave me another good hug and several kisses. "But come out into the light. I want to see how you've improved. You won't mind, will you, mother?"

"Not if you don't keep her too long."

Putting his arm around my waist, he led me out through the anteroom, and, opening the outer door, we stood on the threshold between the room and the hall.

I say we stood there, and so we did. We didn't get any farther, at least not just then. Never were two people more astonished, bewildered. We were entire strangers to each other.

"Great Scott!" was his exclamation.

"Heavens!" was mine.

He dropped his arm as if it had been shot, and I quickly drew away.

"How in the name of"—

"I must have—got into—the wrong"—

At this point he regained his equanimity. "If you're not my sister, you're certainly worthy to be any one's sister. At any rate, I'm happy to make your acquaintance, even by mistake, though I assure you I don't usually do so slight an acquaintance"—

He paused, and my face flushed crimson.

"Come," he said reassuringly, "tell me how it happened."

I told him my story, and he replied that his own sister, who had been away from home on a long visit, was expected the next day. He insisted that I needed a luncheon and ordered one, and while I was eating it he telephoned for a carriage. When it came he got in with me and began a hunt for me for my home. My father's name was not in the directory, but I told my new found friend that he was an attorney, and, driving to the office of one of the profession, we learned the address. Ten minutes later I was with my own family.

The family into which I had blundered became my intimate friends. The daughter called on me, and the son has been so attentive to me as to—we shall see.

How to Remove Dark Freckles.

An almond-lemon plaster is the best remedy for removing dark freckles. Smooth a tablespoonful of dry mustard with lemon juice and then add a teaspoonful of oil of almonds. This treatment is strenuous and should be taken in the evening just before retiring. Spread the paste evenly all over the skin, taking great care to keep it away from the eyes as much as possible. In a few minutes the paste begins to burn the skin, and then it should be washed off immediately. The burning sensation means that the skin is beginning to bleach. Be sure to get the face thoroughly cleaned with hot water and then massage a good cold cream or skin food into the skin. Only a few days of this treatment are necessary, and then the face peels as it does when sunburned. Even the most obstinate freckles may be removed with this treatment. The rosewater and borax solution must be used every few days to keep the skin free from freckles.

How to Make Homemade Soap.

In trimming meats before cooking save all waste scraps of fat, try out and put in a tin pail until you have collected about five and a half pounds of grease. Melt, strain through a wire sieve into a dishpan and cool to lukewarm. Dissolve in an earthen vessel a ten cent can of lye and three tablespoonfuls of borax in three and one-half pints of cold water. Let the lye mixture also become lukewarm. When the grease and lye are of the same temperature pour the lye into the grease, stir about two minutes and pour into square or round granite pans. The soap will be hard and ready to cut in about twelve hours. This makes a hard soap that does not injure the hands.

PLANT TREES OF GOOD VARIETIES

Advice Given by E. H. Clark of Eveline to Farmers

ALWAYS CULTIVATE, THIN AND SPRAY

Too Many Varieties Planted in Most Orchards

Claims this Section can Outclass Whole State in Apple Crops.—Facts that are Worth Remembering.

Last week The COURIER man made a business trip through Eveline township and had the pleasure of going through the orchard of E. H. Clark, who has this year one of the best apple crops in this county. Below is his answer regarding how he took care of his trees to produce the crop he harvested:

Having been asked for figures about my apple crop of this year, I submit the following. When considering these figures, allowance should be made for the following:

1. That part (½) of our orchard is composed of young trees which bear only 2 to 5 bushels each.

2. That, like many others, the planter of this orchard "got stuck" by a nursery company and we have trees almost worthless, and others of little value in this locality. Included among these varieties are such apples as Ben Davis or Gano, Rambo, Salome, Greasy Pfppin, Perry Russet and Peewoukee.

3. Also, like many other orchards, ours contains too many varieties, many of which are of little value, instead of two to four good standard varieties. It has been stated by good authority that northern Michigan orchards contain 23 varieties. If this figure was cut in two, leaving only 3, the orchards would be of much more value.

4. Also, this is our "off year" for Duchess, Astrachan, Spys and only ⅓ of a crop of Snows, and only part of a crop of Baldwins.

I harvested this year from 7½ acres of land, 275 barrels of No. 1 and fancy apples. The culls from these 275 barrels were between 20 and 25 bushels of No. 2's and culls, which does not include windfalls.

I sprayed all of the orchard twice part of it 3 times, the Snows particularly. In spraying, I used the standard formulas recommended by the state and United States agricultural departments—Bordeaux Mixture and Arsenate of Lead. My spraying apparatus consisted of a good brass barrel pump mounted on two wheels, 10 feet of hose, a 10 foot bamboo rod, on the end of which was a four-cluster nozzle.

I plowed the orchard as early as possible and harrowed until about August 15. This conserves the moisture and with the spraying, I know that this greatly lessened the amount of windfalls, especially during the dry weather.

Those who have not cultivated, thinned and sprayed, do not realize the increased profits obtained by these methods. The man who does not spray can pick a plate, a bushel or perhaps a barrel (if he has trees enough of one variety) of about as good apples as the man who sprays, but he cannot put up 10, 20 or 100 barrels of apples and make them like that one barrel.

For instance, I barreled 33 barrels of one variety and had left less than 2 bushels of No. 2 and culls, and I make all my barrels grade strictly No. 1.

I put up 15 barrels of another variety and had only 1 bushel of No. 2 and culls. This variety was thinned, and I was told by an authority on fruit that they were the best Spitzenberg he ever saw in the east, that they equaled the Spitz of the west in size but not quite in color.

I also thinned my Wolf Rivers, and had 20 barrels of strictly fancy fruit. While this variety is of fine appearance, it is of poor quality and I do not think it a good one to set out. I find the most profitable varities are Duchess, Snows, Baldwins, Greenings and Spys.

The poorest apples I barreled this year were in an orchard where trees were in a June grass sod. The best apples I barreled came from cultivated trees. I barreled 65 barrels of No. 1's in an orchard set in sod, and the owner drew over 150 bushels of windfalls and culls away for cider. It took 4 to 4½ bushels of apples as they came from the trees to make a barrel of No. 1's.

In another orchard that had been trimmed and cultivated but not sprayed, I put up 18 barrels of fine Baldwins and culled out only about 2½ bushels.

I have demonstrated in our own orchard and observed while packing apples the past two months that every day's labor and every dollar of expense that we put onto our orchards, if done intelligently, returns an enormous interest on the investment.

Also that an amatuer can, by careful reading and studying of horticultural papers and government bulletins and the application of a little elbow grease on a pump handle, get surprising results in the control of the appie scab and the coddling moth. When apples are worth from $2.00 to $2.50 per per barrel and a tree can be made to produce from 1 to 5 barrels of strictly No. 1 apples, instead of one-half as many apples of fair quality and the balance cider apples at 15 cents per bushel, it is a proposition that deserves attention. We can out-class many, if not all, sections of this state on apples, but we cannot on peaches or plums or cherries. Therefore, let us set out apple trees of good varieties and take care of them.

HALLOWE'EN PARTIES

Octagon Club Entertain Friends at Home of Magdeline Mullin

Miss Mildred Johnson Gives Pleasant Party Monday Night

Monday evening the Octagoon Club gave a Hallowe'en party at the home of Miss Madeline Mullin, to forty guests, Mr. and Mrs. Rachow acting as chaperons. The house was beautifully decorated for the occasion, being trimmed with mountain ash, palms, pumpkins and cornstalks. On the wall were black cats, carrots being used for candle-sticks, the interior presenting the appearance of an old time witches' hovel. The queen of ghosts was a figure, nine feet high, suspended from the wall by the hair. A continued rumbling noise was heard, caused by the falling of water on a bell. Fortune telling, music and dancing were the features of the evening.

The banquet hall was in the basement, tables being set for forty, with many dainties, the chief of which was an immense pumpkin pie at each plate.

The boys were there dressed as firemen to compete with the girls who were dressed as ghosts and gypsy girls.

Miss Mildred Johnson gave a Hallowe'en party to a dozen friends Monday evening, the time being pleasantly spent in playing progressive pedro. One of the most pleasing features of the evening was the placing at the plate of each guest, cards upon which had been written rhymes describing their peculiarities.

Mrs. Lon See gave a Hallowe'en party to a number of lady friends Saturday evening.

GREEN---COLLYER

One of the Prettiest Weddings of the Season —At Home in Chicago.

Edward Guy Green, son of Major E. H. Green of this city, and Miss Zailee Collyer of Cadillac, were married at the home of the bride, Wednesday afternoon, October 27.

This wedding was one of the prettiest of the fall weddings. The residence of the bride was a mass of carnations and roses, with smilax used in profusion. The Episcopal ceremony was used, Rev. Herman J. Keyser, rector of Christ church of this city, officiating. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal couple left for the east after which they will be at home in Chicago, where Mr. Green is engaged as a structural engineer.

Those attending from this city besides Mr. Keyser were Major and Mrs. Green and Miss Edna Sue Green.

EVELINE TOWNSHIP

Produces Records-breaking Crops from Fields and Orchards.

Marion Township Another One of Our Fine Farming Communities.

Eveline township ranks as one of the best in the county, being settled with a class of farmers who are interested in their profession and who are putting into practise the lessons which can be learned from the experience of others.

In a drive through Eveline last week, the COURIER man was enabled to pick up a few items showing what Eveline township farmers are doing.

R. H. Sherman, from a small orchard, sold thirty-one barrels of apples, and harvested a crop of wheat which yielded twenty-five bushel to the acre.

R. E. Walker's buildings are all modern and while we were unable to secure figures on his crops they all were looking good.

Chris. Lyngklip, from his three-fourths acre orchard sold 70 bushel of Spys and 200 bushel of other varieties. His other crops paid in proportion, ten acres of oats yielding 400 bushel and fourteen acres of rye 325 bushel.

Peter and John Nasson have fine farms which it does one good to see, as has also Peter Knudsen, who is one of the most successful growers of beets in the township.

John Imel sold ninety-four dollars worth of cherries this year and three hundred dollars worth of apples besides putting 125 bushel in his cellar. Mr. Imel also has 12 acres of good corn and his wheat went twenty-five bushel to the acre. In this vicinity also are the farms of A. Voiter and Tom Cunningham which are in good shape.

Will Bird, living near Ironton has a fine farm which produced him some prize apples this season.

A. B. Clark is the possessor of a fine farm and has a small patch of beets which are the finest seen yet in the county.

John Cooper, from three and one fourth acres of wheat, threshed 119 bushel, a yield which is ahead of any reported from the far famed wheat regions of the world.

In Marion Supervisor Adams has a fine farm which he keeps in a high state of cultivation with the assistance of his son, Jay. Mr. Adams is a believer in fine horseflesh and has some of the best bred horses to be found in the county.

Another official of Marion, Treasurer Pierce, has a well kept up farm. He has a very good stand of beets.

H. Brock, James Cook, C. VanZant, Joe Rodgers, William Dougherty, Bert Brown, John Cooper and Frank Blanchard are progressive farmers in this locality.

J. A. Newman has new buildings erected during the past two years and makes a specialty of small fruits.

Thus we might go on catalogning farm after farm, one of which would be a repetition of the other.

At the banquet of the Greenville Republican Club, held Thursday evening Chase S. Osborn announced his platform. It is now up to the other candidates to announce their reasons for asking the support of the people.

VICTORY WON BY CHARLEVOIX

In Hard Fought Game With Boyne City Saturday

CLEAN PLAYING FEATURE OF GAME

Paddock and Dargan Again are Stars of Team

Charlevoix Boys Show Gain in Form. Each Game—Will Meet the Alumni Friday Afternoon.

The hopes of Boyne City of adding a second victory over Charlevoix to their list, were badly shattered when the locals turned the tables, winning by a score of 6 to 5.

Like the former game between the two teams, which resulted in a victory for Boyne City, the game was a continued see-saw, few star plays being made. The punting of Charlevoix was very weak and was out distanced by their opponents.

The game was lacking in any of the ordinary accusations of rough play or unfair decisions, both sides playing a clean game.

The local boys were encouraged by a fair sized crowd and showed their appreciation of it by going into the game with a vim that could not help but win.

The game started by Boyne kicking to Charlevoix, the latter choosing the north goal. For the first few minutes of play the ball was in Charlevoix's territory, little gain being made by either side, then Boyne got the ball and worked it within 20 yards of their goal where by a fake place kick formation, a neat forward pass was executed which resulted in in a fourth-down. Goal was missed score 5 to 0.

That caused the Charlevoix boys to ginger up and Papineau was sent around end for a large gain: then Paddock decided it was time something was doing and grasping the pigskin under his trusty right arm sprinted up the field for a sixty five yard run across the [illegible]. Score 5 to 5. Dargan's foot added another point to the score by kicking goal. This finished the scoring for the first half.

For the remainder of the half little progress was made. Several forward passes were tried but few worked successfully. Hull showed up well and played well.

In the second half the battle started by Charl kicking off. Shortly after starting, time was taken out for Hull who was slightly injured. The ball was in Boyne's territory most of the first part of the half and then Boyne dropped back for a punt. Carey broke thru and broke up the play by gracefully knocking the punter down and gently falling on top of him. The ball was recovered on Boyne's 20 yard line and it looked for a time as it the home team would score but by a series of punts the ball was kicked out of danger. The game ended with the ball within 20 yards of Charl goal.

The team as a body showed up better than their opponents although they were weak in punting.

Coach Wilson was very much pleased with the game and said "I think the fellows showed up very well. We had a little hard luck during the week and I was obliged to place Paddock, who has been playing half into left end. Kirby was changed from center to right tackle and Powers was put into the game for the first time at center. Hull was also changed from end to half, and Carey from tackle to full back. Considering the changes made I am very much pleased."

The way the team went after Boyne after the first touchdown was made was a sight for sore eyes. They showed all around Boyne from then on although not enough to get any more points.

The team lined up as follows: Center, Powers; guards, Jacobs, Krultek; tackles, Pool, Kirby; ends Paddock; g. Papineau; quarter, Wallace; full Carey; left half, Hull; right half Dargan.

For Friday night a game has been arranged with the Alumni, who under the leadership of Capt. Levinson are fully decided that they will put one over on the regulars. Much interest is being taken in the game for although

JELLYFISH.

In Tropical Waters This Queer Creature Is at Its Best.

Few marine animals seem at first glance to betray less intelligence than the jellyfish. Up with the tide and down with the tide, carried along by this or that current, moving within the eddy of a lackwater hither and thither, the jellyfish has become almost a synonym for helplessness. Scientifically, of course, the popular idea of the jellyfish is wholly mistaken, but it is perhaps only in tropical waters that it is found in the perfection of mindlessness. In the south Pacific round the Islands of Polynesia and as far south as the upper portion of the North Island of New Zealand there is a jellyfish that not only knows where it wants to go, but is even provided with a sail which it can and does hoist or lower at will. The sail, like the rest of this curious animal, is almost transparent; but, unlike the body of the fish, which is of the usual gelatinous construction, the sail is a membrane almost as hard as shell. Round about the Ellice group the navigating fish is often found with a sail measuring five inches across, and it navigates the shallow island waters with the skill of a pilot, steering in and out of snaggy places and avoiding obstructions both above and below the surface, with unerring skill. Like its cousins in home waters, this navigating jellyfish has the power of stinging its natural enemies, and its sting is fatal to other fish and dangerous to man.—London Standard.

BILLY THE BORE.

He Was Very Different From the Poet and the Halfback.

By TEMPLE BAILEY.

[Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

There was no denying that Billy was not deeply intellectual. He was tall and blond, with broad shoulders and a smile that was like sunshine on a gloomy day. But among the girls of the college these qualities counted for little, for they worshiped at the shrine of the poet and of the halfback. The poet had long hair, and so had the halfback, but otherwise they had nothing in common except that they both loved Dulcie Drayton.

Billy loved Dulcie too. But he hadn't half a chance, for the poet wrote sonnets to Dulcie's eyebrows, and the halfback let her shine in his reflected football glory.

Now and then she consented to make Billy happy. "Yes, I will walk with you," she told him graciously one October day; "only we mustn't go very far, for I have an engagement with the halfback."

"All right," said Billy and promptly forgot his watch.

The halfback was raging when they finally reached Dulcie's home. "We have missed the game," he said. "Of course if I had been playing I wouldn't have waited; but, as it is, I have hung around."

"Billy forgot his watch," Dulcie apologized, "and we didn't realize how late it was."

"I should think he would bore you to death," the halfback said when Billy had left them. "How can you stand that fellow?"

"He's not bad," Dulcie defended. "Of course he hasn't such an awful lot of brains, and he hasn't done such wonderful things as you have, but he's got an awfully good disposition."

And the halfback remembering his own trembling and growing, said "Oh, well," uncomfortably and wondered if Dulcie was hitting at him.

A few days later the poet took Dulcie to task about Billy. "You danced with him four times last night," he said, "and I wanted you to sit out those dances in the conservatory with me. I had a new poem to read to you. It was about young October's golden eyes, and it is dedicated to you."

"Read it to me now," said Dulcie. "I'd love to hear it."

"The atmosphere isn't right," the poet replied, "not here on the campus, but last night there was a little moon, and there were red roses on the ladies."

"Billy is an awfully good dancer," Dulcie reflected, which, as the poet generally got mingled up even in a twostep, was not tactful.

For several days after that, however, the rivalry between the poet and the halfback was so intense that Billy was left completely in the background.

The poet sat up half the night writing verses, in all the theme was "love, love, love," and he claimed every spare moment of Dulcie's time to read them to her.

"He writes about my hair," she told Billy, "and calls it 'soft spun silk shimmering in the sunshine.'"

"I don't see the use of straying out a lot of shimmering sunshine sentences when your hair is too beautiful to be described," said Billy dumbly.

Dulcie smiled up at him. "After all, I like the way you put it, Billy," she said, "and I'm glad you like the color of my hair."

"I love it," Billy stated, "and I love you, Dulcie."

"Oh, oh—not—just—yet!"—Dulcie protested.

"Well, not now. If you don't want me to, but I shall tell you again, Dulcie," Billy answered.

"And he will," Dulcie told her most intimate friend that night. "He will ask me over and over again."

"Well, of course you couldn't marry him," said the intimate friend calmly, "not such a bore."

"I am not sure that Billy deserves that nickname," said Dulcie. "He doesn't talk moonshine like the poet or brag of himself like the halfback, but he does say some nice, sensible, good hearted things, and he has a lovely smile."

The intimate friend sat up and looked at her. "Well, of all things," she said; "I believe you are half in love with him. How you can think of him when you have the choice of two such men as the poet and the halfback is more than I can understand."

"But are they really in love with me?" Dulcie demanded.

"They have asked you to marry them, haven't they?" Marion asked.

"Yes. But somehow it seems to me that they are always thinking of themselves. But Billy thinks of me."

"Oh," Marion said softly, "I know what you mean. If you married the poet or the halfback you would have to worship at their shrines, while Billy would worship at yours."

"Yes," said Dulcie, "that's it, and a man who loves you that way can't exactly bore you, can he?"

"No, he can't," said Marion, "but of course you can never tell how long it will last."

"Sometimes I have thought I should like to put them to a test as ladies did with the knights of old," Dulcie meditated.

"But what test?" Marion demanded. "could you have in modern days?"

"In the old times it was a test of strength and skill," Dulcie stated, "but today there is one goal, Marion, money. You know I have a lot in our own right. And the boys know it, all of them, the poet and the halfback and Billy. Perhaps that is what makes the most popular girl in school—my money, not just me myself."

"You are a darling," Marion encouraged her, "but you know how men are."

"Yes, I do," Dulcie agreed. And they then and there constructed a plot.

The next night the poet, lingering in the shadow of the elms, was met by Marion. When they had talked for a moment she said, "Isn't it sad about Dulcie Drayton."

"Sad?" the poet echoed.

"Oh, didn't she tell you?" Marion hesitated. "Then I ought not to."

But the poet urged her.

"Well, she has lost all of her money," Marion said. "I am her roommate, and I saw the letter. But please don't speak of it."

"Of course not," said the poet.

But that night he wrote many verses, and in all of them was a note of renunciation, and the next day he gave them to Dulcie. "They are very sad," he explained, "but I have come to believe that a genius should not marry. Only in the sadness of solitude can talent be developed. I must give you up, my Dulcie."

"I am not your Dulcie," the girl started, with a little flame in her cheeks.

She did not reproach him. What was the use of reproaching such a feeble thing as the poet? But when Marion had told the halfback the same tale and he had without compunction broken an engagement with Dulcie, giving as an excuse "I am going to cut out dances for awhile—and girls," she allowed herself the luxury of a retort.

"Then you won't miss me when I go away," she said jealously.

"Go away?" he questioned.

"Yes. You see, I am eighteen tomorrow, and my money will be my own to use as I please, and I have so many plans"—

"But," the halfback gasped, "I thought you had lost your money!" He stopped, red to the ears.

"So did the poet," said Dulcie. "Marion told both of you some kind of tale, and both of you believed it."

"That wasn't the reason," the halfback excused.

Dulcie stopped him sternly. "Yes, it was. That was why you gave up girls—that was why you gave up me!" And she left him abruptly.

"I am half afraid to have you tell Billy," she told Marion that night. "If he should fail me"—

But Billy when he heard the news came straight to her.

"Marion has told me," he said shyly. "I haven't much, Dulcie, but I love you, and I want you to marry me at once if you will."

Dulcie laid her hand on his arm. "Billy," she said, "I am not poor. I put you and the poet and the halfback to a test, and only you stood it. You are the knight of the true heart and I love you."

After Billy had kissed her rapturously he asked, "Are you sure I won't bore you, Dulcie?"

"If you knew how I hated the poet's poems and the halfback's boasting you wouldn't ask such a silly question, Billy," she replied.

Hospital "Boarders."

"There is a class which gives every hospital in the city a whole lot of trouble, especially in the winter time," said a member of the faculty of the Pennsylvania hospital. "It is made up of what we call 'steady boarders,' nothing men who have no homes, who are too lazy to work and who feign illness in order to secure a comfortable bed and good food for a week or so at a time. However, we have devised a scheme which is quite effective in driving them away. When one of these boarders arrives on the scene we can usually spot him. We know the earmarks of the species. He is taken into the receiving ward, solemnly undressed and laid upon the operating table, where a fake examination takes place. The trouble is finally located in the spine, and an immediate operation is advised. The patient writhes, protesting that he feels much better, but is not permitted to leave. Meanwhile a piece of ice has been sharpened to a point and suddenly, without warning, the ice is drawn down the boarder's back. With a yell he is off the table, out of the room and out of the building. We throw his clothes out after him, and he never comes back."—Philadelphia Record.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

CHAPTER XIV.

TWO CALLS FROM THE ENEMY.

DEPPINGHAM was up and about quite early the next morning—that is, quite early for him. He had his rolls and coffee and strolled out in the shady park for a smoke. The princess, whose sense of humiliation had not been lessened by the fitful sleep of the night before, was walking in the shade of the trees on the lower terrace, beyond the fountains and the artificial lake.

"I was thinking of you," she said in greeting as she came up.

"How nice you are," he said. "But, my dear, is it wise in you to be thinking of us handsome devils? It's a most dangerous habit—thinking of other men."

"But, Deppy, dear, the prince isn't here," she said, falling into his humor. "That makes quite a difference, doesn't it?"

"Your logic is splendid. Pray resume your thoughts of me—if they were pleasant and agreeable. I'll not blow on you to Karl. By the way, I have a compliment for you. Browne says your hair is more beautiful than Pong's. That's quite a compliment. Tillau never even dreamed of hair like Pong's."

"You know, Deppy," she said, with a pout, "I am very unhappy about my hair. It is quite red. I don't see why I should have hair like that of a red cocker. It seems so animalish."

"Rubbish! Why should you complain? Look at my hair.—It's been likened more than once to that of a Jersey cow."

"Oh, how I adore Jersey cows! Now, I wouldn't mind that a bit."

They were looking toward the lower gates while carrying on this frivolous conversation. A man had just entered and was coming toward them. Both recognized the tall figure in gray flannels.

"I trust I am not intruding," Chase said as he came up. His gaze was as much for Deppingham as for the princess, his remark quite impersonal.

"Not at all, not at all," said Deppingham quickly, his heart leaping to the conclusion that the way to the American bar was likely to be opened at last. "Charmed to have you here, Mr. Chase. You've been most unneighborly. Have you been presented to her highness, the— Oh, to be sure. Of course you have. Stupid of me."

"We met ages ago," she said, with an ingenuous smile, which would have disarmed Chase if he had been prepared for anything else. As a matter of fact, he had approached her in the light of an adventurer who expects nothing and grasps at straws.

"In the dark ages," said he so ruefully that her smile grew. He had come, in truth, to ascertain why her husband had not come with her.

"But not the forgotten variety, I fancy," said Deppingham shrewdly.

"It would be impossible for the princess to forget the greatest of all fools," said Chase.

"He was no worse than other mortals," said she.

"Thank you," said Chase. Then he turned to Lord Deppingham. "My visit requires some explanation, Lord Deppingham. You have said that I am unneighborly. No doubt you appreciate my reasons. One has to respect appearances," with a dry smile. "When one is in doubt he must do as the Moslems do, especially if the Moslems don't want him to do as he wants to do."

"No doubt you're right, but it sounds a bit involved," murmured Deppingham. "Lady Deppingham will be delighted to see you. Are you ready to come in, princess?"

They started toward the chateau, keeping well in the shade of the boxed trees, the princess between the two men.

"I say, Chase, do you mind relieving my fears a bit? With all due respect to your estimable clients, it occurs to me that they are likely to break over the traces at any moment and raise the very old Harry at somebody else's expense. I'd like to know if my head is really safe."

"I came to see you in regard to that very thing, Lord Deppingham. I don't want to alarm you, but I do not like the appearance of things. They don't trust me and they hate you—quite naturally. I'm rather sorry that our British man-of-war is out of reach. Pray don't be alarmed, princess. It is most improbable that anything evil will happen. And, in any event, we can hold out against them until relief comes."

"We?" demanded Deppingham.

"Certainly. If it comes to an assault of any kind upon the chateau I trust that I may be considered as one of you. I won't serve assassins and bandits—at least not after they've got beyond my control. Besides, if the worst should come they won't discriminate in my favor."

"Why do you stay here, Mr. Chase?" asked the princess. "You admit that they do not like you or trust you. Why do you stay?"

"I came out here to escape certain consequences," said he candidly. "I'll stay to enjoy the uncertain ones. I am not in the least alarmed on my own account. The object of my visit Lord Deppingham, is to ask you to be on your guard up here. After the next steamer arrives and they learn that Sir John will not withdraw me in submission to Rasula's demand, with the additional news that your solicitors have filed injunctions and have begun a bitter contest that may tie up the estate for years—then, I say, we may have trouble. It is best that you should know what to expect. I am not a traitor to my cause in telling you this. It is no more than I would expect from you were the conditions reversed."

"It's mighty decent in you, Chase, to put us on our guard. Would you mind talking it over with Browne and me after luncheon? You'll stay to luncheon, of course?"

"Thank you. It may be my death sentence, but I'll stay."

In the wide east gallery they saw Lady Deppingham and Bobby Browne deeply engrossed in conversation. Deppingham started and involuntarily allowed his hand to go to his temple as if to check the thought that flitted through his brain.

"Good Lord," he said to himself, "is it possible that they are considering that — Saunders' proposition? Surely they can't be thinking of that!"

As he led the way across the green Browne's voice came to them distinctly. He was saying earnestly:

"The mere fact that we have come out to this blessed Isle is a point in favor of the Islanders. Chase won't overlook it, and you may be sure Sir John Brodney is making the most of it. Our coming is a guarantee that we consider the will valid. It is an admission that we regard it as sound. If not, why should we recognize its provisions, even in the slightest detail? Britt is looking for hallucinations and all"—

"Sh!" came in a loud hiss from somewhere near at hand, and the two in the gallery looked down with startled eyes upon the distressed face of Lord Deppingham. They started to their feet at once, astonishment and wonder in their faces. They could scarcely believe their eyes. The enemy!

He was smiling broadly as he lifted his helmet, smiling in spite of the discomfort that showed so plainly in Deppingham's manner.

Chase was warmly welcomed by the two heirs. Lady Agnes was especially cordial. Her eyes gleamed joyously as she lifted them to meet his admiring gaze. She was amazingly pretty. The conviction that Chase had mistaken her for Lady Agnes the evening before took a fresh grasp upon the mind of the Princess Genevra. A shameless wave of relief surged through her heart.

Chase was presented to Drusilla Browne, who appeared suddenly upon the scene, coming from no one knew where. There was a certain strained look in the Boston woman's face and a suspicious redness near the bridge of her little nose.

"It's very good of you," said the enemy after all of them had joined in the invitation. "Why is it that I am more fortunate than your own attorneys? I am but a humble lawyer, after all, no better than they. Would you mind telling me why I am honored by an invitation to sit at the table with you?" The touch of easy sarcasm was softened by the frank smile that went with it. Deppingham felt it his duty to explain.

"It's—it's—er—oh, yes, it's because you're a diplomat," he finally remarked in triumph. It was a grand recovery, thought he. "Saunders is an ass, and Britt would be one if Browne could only admit it, as I do. Rubbish! Don't let that trouble you. Eh, Browne?"

"Besides," said Bobby Browne breezily, "I haven't heard of your clients inviting you to lunch, Mr. Chase. The cases are parallel."

"I'm not so sure about his clients' wives," said Deppingham, with a vast haw-haw!, Chase looked extremely uncomfortable.

"I am told that some of them are very beautiful," said Genevra sedately.

"Other men's wives always are, I've discovered," said Chase gallantly.

The party had moved over to the great stone steps which led down into the gardens. Chase was standing beside Lady Deppingham, and both of them were looking toward his distant bungalow.

"That is my home, princess. It is the first time I have seen it from your point of view, Lady Deppingham. I must say that it doesn't seem as far from the chateau to the bungalow as it does from the bungalow to the chateau. There have been times when the chateau seemed to be thousands of miles away."

"When in reality it was at your very feet," she said, with a bright look into his eyes. For some unaccountable reason Genevra resented that look and speech.

"Is that really where you live?" she asked, so innocently that Chase had difficulty in controlling his expression.

At that instant something struck sharply against the stone column above Chase's head. At least three persons saw the little puff of smoke in the hills far to the right. Every one heard the distant crack of a rifle. The bullet had dropped at Chase's feet before the sound of the report came floating to their ears. No one spoke as he stooped and picked up the warm, deadly missile. Turning it over in his fingers, he said coolly, although his cheek had gone white:

"With Von Blitz's compliments, ladies and gentlemen. He is calling on me by proxy."

"Good God, Chase," cried Browne, "they're trying to murder us! Get back, every one! Inside the doors!"

"I'm sorry to bring my troubles to your door," said Chase. "It was meant for me, not for any of you. The man who fired that did not intend to kill me. He was merely giving voice to his pain and regret at seeing me in such bad company." He was smiling calmly and did not take a single step to follow them to safety.

"Come in, Chase! Don't stand out there to be shot at."

"I'll stay here for a few minutes, Mr. Browne, if you don't mind, just to convince you all that the shot was not intended to kill. They're not ready to kill me yet. I'm sure Lord Deppingham will understand. He has been shot at often enough since he came to the island."

He lighted a cigarette and coolly leaned against the column, his gaze bent on the spot where the smoke had been seen. The others were grouped inside the doors, where they could see without being seen. A certain sense of horror possessed all of the watchers.

"For heaven's sake, why does he stand there?" cried the princess at last. "I can endure it no longer. It may be as he says it is, but it is foolhardy to stand there and taunt the pride of that marksman. I can't stay here and wait for it to come. How can"—

"He's been there for ten minutes, princess," said Browne—"plenty of time for another try."

Before they were aware of her intention the princess left the shelter and boldly walked across the open space to the side of the man. He started and opened his lips to give vent to a sharp command.

"It is so easy to be a hero, Mr. Chase, when one is quite sure there is no real danger," she said, with distinct irony in her tones. "One can afford to be melodramatic if he knows his part so well as you know yours."

Chase felt his face burn. It was a direct declaration that he had planned the whole affair in advance. He flicked the ashes from his cigarette and then tossed it away, hesitating long before replying.

"Nevertheless I have the greatest respect for the courage which brings you to my side. I dare say you are quite justified in your opinion of me. It must seem very theatrical to you. I had not thought of it in that light. I shall now retire from the center of the stage. It will be perfectly safe for you to remain here—just as it was for me." He was leaving her without another word or look. She repented.

"I am sorry for what I said," she said eagerly. "And"—she looked up at the hills with a sudden widening of her eyes—"I think I shall not remain."

Chase made light of the occurrence but sought to impress upon the other the fact that it was prophetic of more serious events in the future. In a perfectly cold blooded manner he told them that the Islanders might rise against them at any time.

"The people are angry, and they will become desperate. Their interests are mine, of course. I am perfectly sincere in saying to you, Lady Deppingham, and to you, Mr. Browne, that in time they will win out against you in the courts. But they are impatient. They are not the kind who can wait and be content. It is impossible for you to carry out the provisions of the will, and they know it. That is why they resent the delays that are impending."

Deppingham told him of the scheme proposed by Saunders, treating it as a vast joke. Chase showed a momentary sign of uneasiness, but covered it instantly by laughing with the others. Strange to say, he had been instructed from London to look out for just such a coup on the part of the heirs—not that the marriage could be legally established, but that it might create a complication worth avoiding.

He could not help looking from Lady Deppingham to Bobby Browne, a calculating gleam in his gray eyes. How very dangerous she could be! He was quite ready to feel very sorry for pretty Mrs. Browne. He sat opposite to the princess. His eyes were refreshing themselves after months of fatigue; his blood was coursing through new veins. And yet his head was calling his heart a fool.

CHAPTER XV.

THE PRINCESS GOES GALLOPING.

A WEEK passed—an interesting week in which few things happened openly, but in which the entire situation underwent a subtle but complete change. The mail steamer brought disconcerting news from London. Chase was obliged to tell the Islanders that notice of a contest had been filed. The lineal heirs had pooled their issues and were now fighting side by side. The matter would be in chancery for months, even years. He could almost feel the gust of rage and disappointment that swept over the island, although not a word came from the lips of the sullen population. The very silence was foreboding.

He did not visit the chateau during that perplexing week. It was hard, but he resolutely kept to the path of .....got an idea that they may try to put him out of the way—him and Drusilla. Awful, isn't it? And, say, by the way, Saunders is getting to dislike you intensely."

"I can't help it if he loves the only stenographer on the island," said Chase easily. "You seem to be the only one who isn't in hot water all the time, Britt."

"Me and the princess," said Britt laconically. Chase looked up quickly, but the other's face was as straight as could be. "If you were a real gentleman you would come around once in awhile and give her something to talk to instead of about."

"Does she talk about me?" quite steadily.

"They all do. I've even heard the white handmaidens discussing you in glowing terms. You're a regular matinee hero up there, my"—

"Selim!" broke in Chase. The Arab came to the table immediately. "Don't put so much liquor in Mr. Britt's drinks after this—mostly water." Britt grinned amiably.

"I say, Britt, you're not responsible for this affair between Browne and Lady Deppingham, are you?" demanded Chase abruptly.

"I? What do you mean?"

"I was just wondering if you could have put Browne up to the game in the hope that a divorce or two might solve a very difficult problem."

"Now that you mention it, I'm going to look up the church and colonial divorce laws," said Britt nonchalantly after a moment.

"I advise you to hurry," said Chase coolly. "If you can divorce and marry 'em inside of four weeks, with no court qualified to try the case nearer than India, you are a wonder."

Chase was in the habit of visiting the mines two or three times a week during work hours. The next morning after his conversation with Britt he rode out to the mines. When he reached the brow of the last hill, overlooking the wide expanse in which the men toiled, he drew rein sharply and stared aghast at what lay before him. Five hundred half naked brown men

THEATRICAL

Now comes the season of amateur plays. "Drop your troubles and worries," as 'tis said, for they will drop of their own accord on seeing the "Gilded Youth," in all his glory, glistening with that rich wit and humor which is only found in a high class play such as "The Gilded Youth." Monday, November 8, we shall see the first product of the only and original "Charlevoix Dramatic Club." The club was formed only to study the dramatic art. Among the people who will take part in this first play are the well koown theatrical amateurs: May, Feltz, Bessie Cohen, Henry Partridge, Ainslee Mayne and Sam Levinson, and under the direction of Mrs. Agnes Jarvis, a success is assured. "The Gilded Youth," is not only a good farce comedy, but intermingled with it are songs, specialties and choruses. Music and specialties are the best that can be procured. The prices of admission have been lowered to 15, 25 and 35 cents, as this club was not formed for financial purposes. Remember the date, Monday, November 8, 1909.

DAINTIES FOR TEA

CONFECTIONERY RECIPES OF REAL VALUE.

Cream Cake, with Its Filling, One of the Best—Vanilla the Basis of What Is Known as Mocha Cake.

Cream Cake.—One cupful sugar, two eggs, one-fourth cupful of butter, one-half cupful of lard, one cupful of sour cream, one-half teaspoonful of salt, two cupfuls of flour, one heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, a tiny bit of soda on end of spoon, and flavoring to taste.

Cream filling: One cupful of sugar, one egg, one and one-half cupfuls of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of vanilla, one heaping teaspoonful of flour. Mix sugar, flour and eggs, stir in hot milk and boil until thick; spread between layers and ice with two tablespoonfuls of sweet milk thickened with powdered sugar.

Mocha Cake. — One cup sugar creamed with yolks of three eggs, one heaping cupful of flour with one scant teaspoonful of baking powder, one-quarter cupful of cold water, and, lastly, the beaten whites of eggs. This cake requires much beating. Bake in eight-inch tin. When cool cut in 36 squares.

Frosting: Cream one cupful of butter and gradually add confectionery sugar as much as it will take, one tablespoonful cream, one dessertspoonful vanilla. Blanch brown and chop fine one pound of almonds. Ice squares on all sides and roll in nuts.

Recipe for Two Cakes.—Two cakes may be made by using five eggs and the following recipes:

Cream together one cupful of sugar and one-half cupful of butter. Add one-half cupful of sweet milk, then two cupfuls of flour that has two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted into it. Last fold in the beaten whites of three eggs and stir well. Bake this in two layers.

Put aside the whites of two eggs for icing and use the five yolks you have for a simple gold cake. Use one-fourth cupful of milk, one cupful of flour, and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Stir ingredients together and bake in a loaf. There will be enough icing for both cakes.

Spice Cake.—One cupful of molasses, one-half cupful of butter and lard mixed, one egg, one cupful of boiling water, two teaspoonfuls of soda, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one of cloves, one teaspoonful of ginger, one-half cupful of raisins, two and one-half cupfuls of flour.

Process: Cream the butter, lard and egg, add molasses. Add the spices and soda to the flour, mixing thoroughly. Mix wet and dry ingredients except water. Add water gradually, stirring constantly. Bake 15 or 20 minutes in moderate oven.

PRODIGIOUS TOOTH IS FOUND.

Much Larger Than Those of Either Mastodon or Mammoth—Dug Up Near Sycamore, Ill.

Chicago.—The tooth of some prehistoric mammoth animal in an excellent state of preservation was brought to Chicago the other day for temporary exhibition in the Field museum. None of the scientists who have viewed the tooth have been able to determine to what sort of animal it once belonged.

The relic of a forgotten age was found by Alex Stroberg on his farm near Sycamore, Ill. When examined carefully it was found to weigh more than ten pounds and measured almost a foot in diameter. It was said it had been a lower tooth in the left jaw. From its appearance it had been used by an animal that lived on shrubs and branches of trees.

"Judging from the tooth," said a scientist who examined it, "the animal in whose mouth it once did service was of tremendous size. It must have been at least fifty or sixty feet long and as tall as a small building. Its mouth itself may have been ten or twelve feet in width and of sufficient size to take in at one bite the top of an ordinary tree.

"In the skeletons of mastodons and mammoths which we have in our museums the teeth are not as large as this one. This find is a valuable contribution to the data of natural history."

Mr. Stroberg will start digging on his farm where the tooth was found, and it is believed either the skeleton or some of the bones may be excavated.

The mastodon and the mammoth were among the largest animals known. The mastodon became extinct in the pleistocene age. Many bones and teeth of the mastodon have been found in America. The animal is believed to have originally lived in the old world, coming to this country by way of Siberia. In that country skeletons intact have been found that were estimated to have been thousands of years old.

INCOME TAX YIELDS MUCH

Produces More Than Any Other Form of Taxation in Britain—Over Half from Inheritances.

Washington.—That the income tax of Great Britain, which has been in force almost continuously since 1812, yielded more revenue in the last fiscal year than any other form of taxation, and that the inheritance tax yields more than half the revenue produced by the income taxes are facts disclosed by statements in the report of Special Agent Pepper of the department of commerce and labor, which has been sent to congress. In 1908 the income tax produced for the government $165,000,000, being levied on a population of 44,500,000, while the inheritance tax yielded $84,230,000.

Incomes below $1,000 are exempt from taxation, and graduated abatements are allowed on incomes between $1,000 and $3,400. The income tax is levied on profits accruing from lands, tenements, hereditages and the occupation of them; on all profits from interest, annuities, dividends and shares of annuities payable to any person or corporation out of any public revenue; on the annual profits accruing to any person in the United Kingdom from any property and from any profession, trade or employment, and upon every public office or employment of profit, as well as upon all pensions paid out of the revenues of the government.

For the last few years the rate of taxation has been one shilling on the pound sterling, or five per cent.

DEEDS OF JESUS OUTDONE.

Dr. Fisher, President of Lombard College, Compares Miracles and Modern Works.

Galesburg, Ill.—Taking for his theme the words of Jesus that those who believe in him can do greater works than he, President Fisher in his baccalaureate sermon to the seniors of Lombard college the other day reminded that it is possible for Christians to do greater work than did Jesus through the exercise of a right belief.

Dr. Fisher compared to what Christ did the achievements of modern physicians and surgeons who have made the art of healing universal and performed remarkable cures. To the changing of water into wine he compared the irrigation schemes of the west, by which water is transformed into products of the fields and orchards. Walking on water the speaker declared too slow, and he compared this to the modern wireless telegraph, by which speedy ships go to the relief of the vessel in distress.

H. H. Rogers, he said, left all he made and kept only with what he was. The man who makes two blades grow where one grew and puts both in his own mouth was declared unChristly.

Cure for Snoring.

Washington.—It is generally known that if persons afflicted with the snoring habit can be prevented from resting on their backs while sleeping they will not snore.

A Chicago man has patented a contrivance which, he says, will effect a sure cure. It consists of a ball, fitted with straps and harness so that it will be just between the shoulder blades. Should the wearer roll over on [illegible] he is immediately awakened, the inventor says.

Hollow Mockery.

No mockery in this world ever sounds to me so hollow as that of being told to cultivate happiness. What does such advice mean? Happiness is not a potato in mold and filled with manure. Happiness is a glory shining far down upon us out of heaven. She is a divine dew which the soul, on certain of its summer mornings, feels dropping upon it from the amaranth bloom and golden fruit age of Paradise.—Charlotte Bronte

The firmer and more rapid the wax and honey the better for them.—St. Nicholas.

Care Much About How Your Shoes Look?

Few shoes keep their style after they have been worn a short time.

This is generally due either to poor "lasting" or else to the use of improper material for stiffening the toe and the back of the shoe around the heel.

"Lasted" by the best paid shoe workers in the world and made with box toes and counters of real leather, WALK-OVER shoes never fall in at the toe or bulge out at the heel. You can be sure of it.

Neighborhood Notes

The State's battle flags have been placed in air-tight steel cases with glass fronts, which will be placed in the rotunda of the capitol. The board of state auditors ordered the cases believing that in view of the tattered condition of the flags that unless extraordinary care was taken of them, the stand of colors would be destroyed in a few years. The flags were taken to the state encampment at Kalamazoo last summer but never again, are they to be taken from the capitol.

Glenn R. Maushaw, supervisor of trespass, has made plans for the systematic watch for trespassers on state lands, and every township in which state lands are located will be cared for and prompt reports made. The state authorities are to co-operate with the county authorities, and it is believed much good will result.

Many tricks are worked by those who steal from the state lands, and the county authorities are recognizing the importance of protecting these lands more than ever before. The prosecutions the past year, which have been looked after closer than ever, has done much to stop this thievery.

Since the road encouragement law went into effect in 1905, 230 applications have been filed for the counties and townships in Western Michigan asking for state rewards upon 2581/2 miles of highway. By far the greater number of applications have been for rewards upon what is known as gravel-road. The states specifications call for a road that is not less than 18 feet wide between ditches and sufficiently rounding to drain quickly and the grade of which nowhere is steeper raise than six feet to the hundred. The road itself must not be less than nine feet wide and the gravel of which it is made must have been laid in two courses and each course rolled and the packed gravel must not be less than eight inches in thickness.

Charles Augustine has just completed plans for a new monoplane which is radically different from those that are now in use and in fact, differs greatly from accepted practice in monoplane work. The difference comes in a simple device which steadies and balances the machine no matter what air currents are encountered and removes the element of danger now present through sudden tilting. As soon as Mr. Augustine can produce a large enough shed, he will start work. To build the machine will require a shed 40x10.

The Wylie & Buell Lumber Co. will put in 50,000,000 feet of logs the coming year. The Kneeland, Buell & Bigelow Co. will get about 22,000,000 feet for its mill at Bay City; 12,000,000 feet will go to Bliss & Van Auken, at Saginaw; Bousfield & Co., of Bay City, the Jackson-Wylie Co., at Gaylord and one or two other parties, will take the remainder. The Wylie & Buell Lumber Co. will operate eight camps and a force of about 700 men. The wages for men in the woods range from $24 to $28. The cost of putting in logs will be high this winter owing to the high prices for food products for both man and beasts.

Auslow Wright of Antrim county, Western Michigan, says that he has raised corn for 32 years and does not remember of having harvested less than forty bushels of shelled corn to the acre. Some years his yield has been 75 bushels. His crop this year will go better than 45. He considers corn a sure crop in western Michigan and says that he occasionally sees good corn on the plains where land is called worthless.

The New York Press says:

"The apple is the fruit of the gods. Leslie Shaw, former secretary of the treasury, eats three every morning for breakfast. He has them sent east from his farm in Iowa."

We agree fully with the New York paper's appreciation of the apple, the fruit that one never tires of, but here in Western Michigan it makes us smile to hear of a man eating three every morning. These Iowa apples would only sell as crab apples in Western Michigan. One of our apples would make a breakfast for Leslie Shaw, Leslie Shaw's wife, Leslie Shaw's children, and Leslie Shaw's maid servant and man servant. One doesn't know what an apple is at its best until he tastes a Western Michigan apple. They haven't the line machine made look of the Oregon or Washington apple, because the winds blow where they grow, but they have a flavor that the apple of the protected valley can't acquire. Note we say "taste" rather than "bite into." One can't bite into one of our big apples. It has to be dissected first to bring it within range of one's salivary glands, but then—O, you apple!—Manistee News.

A PUBLIC BENEFIT

Charlevoix People Greatly Interested In the Generous offer of A. B. Fleischer, The Ivy Drug Store

The people have already demonstrated that they would rather trust a man who is naturally honest than one who is honest only because he had to be.

The Ivy Drug Store have a firmly established reputation for square dealing and sterling honesty. When they told the people that Rexall remedies are the purest and most dependable medicines that it is possible for modern science to produce, and that they would tell the public what each one of these 300 or more remedies contained, and they sold Rexall Remedies on their personal guarantee that they would give entire satisfaction or they would not cost the user a single cent, they were believed.

Ever since this announcement The Ivy Drug store has been largely patronized by people buying Rexall Remedies, all of which proves that this store has the confidence of the people and that honesty is the best policy.

There is no "cure-all" among the Rexall Remedies. There are different and seperate medicines, each one devised for a certain human ailment or a class of ailments closely allied. For instance Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are recommended for the positive relief of stomach irritation, indigestion, flatulency and dyspepsia. They are rich in Bismuth Subnitrate, Pepsin and Carminatives. They are prepared by special process which perfect and enchance the great remedial value of these well known medicinal agents. This remedy sells for 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00 per package. Everyone suffering from stomach disorder should try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, inasmuch as they cost nothing if they do not satisfy.

Remember the Ivy Drug Store is the only store in Charlevoix where these remedies may be obtained, and every one in need of medicine is urged to investigate and take advantage of the frank and generous manner in which they are sold. A. B. Fleischer, The Ivy Drug Store.

Was Nat Too Busy.

Lieut Shackleton told an interesting story of politeness in the untrodden regions of the Antarctic. His party, he said, were always extremely good humored and polite, and one professor in particular attained a degree of politeness unusual under such trying circumstances. "'Are you busy, Mawson?' he called out one night to another member of the party who was in the tent.

"'I am,' said Mawson.

"'Very busy?' said the professor.

"'Yes, very busy.'

"'If you are not too busy, Mawson, I am down a crevasse.'

"The professor was found hanging down a crevasse by his four fingers, a position which he could not have occupied for any length of time."

PRODDED BY MUSIC

HOW MAJ. KENNON GOT WORK CUT OF THE FILIPINOS.

Band Airs Gave Impetus to Laborers' Zeal In Building the Famous Benguet Road Through Luzon Mountains.

Maj. L. W. V. Kennon, now commanding a battalion of the Tenth infantry at Fort Benjamin Harrison, in building the famous Benguet road through the mountains of northern Luzon, Philippine Islands, accomplished a feat called humanly impossible. It took music, money and a mongrel army of 4,000 men to do it, but Benguet road stands to-day one of the remarkable highways of the world.

Maj. Kennon's army of 4,000 road builders rested only on Sunday. For ten hours of each day they forged ahead. On Sunday they rested in their quarters, houses built on poles and grass. They amused themselves with dances, cards and games that appealed to the different nationalities. Maj. Kennon introduced music as one of the attractions along his lonely highway. He is known for his resourcefulness and he does not deny that he used music to get better work out of the pleasure-loving Filipinos and other Orientals. They did not like to work and when they did it was with slow, sluggish movement.

One day Maj. Kennon decided to try music as an impetus to zeal. He assembled his band, made up of men of all nations, and ordered it to move quietly and secretly to a place where several hundred Filipinos were engaged in drilling holes in the canyon walls. The band stole up behind the slow-going drillers and suddenly struck up a favorite Oriental air. Instantly the Filipinos caught the spirit of the music and began to beat their drills against the rock in rhythm.

The result was more than a surprise to the resourceful Kennon. He kept that band busy after that. It followed the Filipinos along the way and played wherever they worked. From laborers worth about ten cents a day he developed them into musical machines that worked to drum beats. Maj. Kennon insists that his band saved the Philippine government thousands of dollars.

A bet had been made between Maj Kennon and his foreman on one side and the members of the Philippine commission on the other side that the road would not be open by January 31, 1905. The story of the bet was borne from tongue to tongue along the road. Maj. Kennon promised each man a cigar if they won the bet. The effect was good. The army of 4,000 beat to their work, there being a man to every seven feet of the road on the last lap into Baguio. On January 29 two days before the expiration of the wager, Maj. Kennon rode into Baguio in a carriage. There was a great celebration and every man in the Kennon army smoked a good cigar marked "The Kennon Special," each with a label bearing the major's picture.

TAILOR'S SIGNALS GO WRONG

Tries an New Shosa and Brings Valley fram the Bar Raam.

The tailor's shop is above a saloon. The tailor likes his German joy, and is such a steady customer that the saloonkeeper decided to put in a dumb waiter for the purpose of shooting the lager up to the tailor without having to carry it up to him or wait for the tailor to run down.

"Ve shall have signals, ao?" suggested the tailor. "Ven I stamp my foot on der floor vonce, dot iss von beer. Ven I stamp two times, dot iss two beers, und so on."

"Dot iss it," responded the saloon keeper, with a smile that indicated his approval. "Von stamp iss von beer und two stamps iss two beers, und yet on so long as you stamp."

The saloon keeper had not been back in his bar room more than five minutes until he heard noise from above. He tried to count the stamps, but lost the count. He just loaded a dozen glasses of beer on the dumb waiter and sent them up. Then he went upstairs with four glases more. As he entered the tailor's door he was surprised to find no one in the shop but the tailor.

"Vot's der matter, Herman?" he said. "Vot are you doing? Are you giving a barty?"

"Vot you mean? For vy iss all dis beer?" queried the tailor.

"For vy iss all dose stamps if not for beer?"

And Herman, to his financial terror, suddenly realized that he had been stamping on the floor. He was trying on a new pair of shoes.

They didn't try to put the beer back into the keg.

DIVORCES RARE IN CANADA

Surprising Difference Between Statistics of United States and Her Neighbor on the North.

There is a surprising difference between the divorce statistics of the United States and those of Canada. While in this country divorces are granted by the thousand, on the other side of the boundary the number rarely reaches even two figures annually. Since 1867 there has been a grand total of 136 divorces granted in Canada.

The figures are given in detail in the St. John Globe as follows:

In 1867-68 one was granted; in '69, one; '70, '71 and '72, none; '73, one; '75, one; '76, one; '77, four; '78, three; '79, one; '84, one; '85, five; '86, one; '87, five; '88, two; '89, four; '90, two; '92, four; '93, seven; '94, six; '95, three; '96, one; '97, one; '98, three; '99, four; 1900, five; '01, two; '02, two; '03, seven; '04, six.

In 1905 nine were granted; in 1906, fourteen; 1907, five; 1908, eight, while the last season collected all records with a total of 16.

WORRY OF THE DRUG CLERK

Curious Mania Some People Have for Getting Medicine Prepared and Not Taking It.

The woman left the prescription and said she would call for the medicine in half an hour.

"I'll bet five dollars she won't," said the clerk. "She just looks like the kind that gets medicine put up for the fun of the thing."

"I didn't suppose there was anybody foolish enough to take her fun that way," remarked the next customer."

"Oh! yes, there are such people, lots of them," said the clerk. "Seldom a week passes that we do not put up a prescription that is never called for. Why in the world the people who thus neglect their remedies after ordering them compounded will go to the trouble and expense of consulting a doctor is more than I can figure out. If they don't want to take the stuff prescribed they certainly don't have to, but they might at least have the grace to come in and take it home after we have gone to the trouble to prepare it, and not throw it back a dead loss on our hands. Why, I've got a regular morgue back there for the repose of uncalled for bottles of medicine. I keep the stuff indefinitely, hoping that in case the customer has not been carried off by sudden death she will show up again some time and ask for the bottle. If I happen to know the delinquent's address I send it around C. O. D., but people who make a practice of ordering medicine that they never intend to take are not apt to leave their card with the druggist."

GIVE UP NICKELS BY TONS.

Interesting Facts Brought Out Regarding System of Rapid Transit in New York.

If each of the 1,000,000,000 passengers who rode on the surface cars of Greater New York last year had paid a nickel there would be enough coins to carpet Madison Square park to the depths of an inch and a half.

A column 1,035 miles in height could be built out of the nickels if placed one on top of another. End to end they would reach a distance of 13,000 miles, a distance as great as that from New York city to Shanghai, China.

These are among the many curious facts regarding New York transit conditions brought out by the graphic chart prepared by D. L. Turnor, chief inspector of the public service commission. Assuming that each passenger paid five cents the total would be $51,000,000, about 5,550 tons of nickels.

The chart, arranged in half-mile zones, shows that of 47,000,000 passengers boarding surface cars within a given period within the half-mile about the city hall 26,000,000 were bound for Brooklyn and 19,100,000 went northward in Manhattan. This did not include elevated and subway travel.

World's Oldest University.

The University of Oxford has the honor of being the oldest of the world's great seats of learning. It is supposed to have been founded by King Alfred in 872, although the early records of the institution are not extant and the exact date of its foundation is not known. It was not until nearly 400 years later—1257—that Oxford's rival, Cambridge university, was founded. Meantime the University of Paris had been established by King Philip II., a distinguished patron of learning for his time, in about 1200.

Harvard university is the oldest institution of learning in the United States, having been founded in 1636 at what was then Newtown, Mass., now Cambridge. William and Mary college came near being the first in this country. The initial steps for its foundation were taken as early as 1617, but it was not until 1693 that a charter was granted and the college opened at Williamsburg, Va.

The first of the public schools established by legislation were in Massachusetts, 1645, but the pioneer town school was opened at Hartford about three years earlier.

At the Embassy Ball.

"Did you say the dark gentleman was a general?"

"Yes, that's Gen. Caballero. Next to him is Gen. Lope de Poncho. They are all generals in that bunch."

"How fine! And they are distinguished men, of course?"

"Well, not so distinguished as the eccentric little man who is talking to the ambassador. That's Sebastiano Colluo. There are 27 Central American generals in the room. He is the only private."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Skepticism.

"I kind of agree with the folks who say that story about George Washington and the cherry tree is a myth," said Farmer Corntossel after a thoughtful silence.

"For what reason?" inquired his wife.

"Well, human nature is purty much the same in all generations. And if I had a boy who picked up an ax an' voluntarily went out to chop wood, I wouldn't chide him. I'd hand him a medal."

Medicine Man Made Good.

In the August Wide World Magazine, C. H. E. Askwith of Ottawa, tells an amusing story of "rain-making." The prosperity of the Yukon is, as every one knows, closely bound up with an abundant rainfall, and in order to insure this the services of a "rain-making expert" were enlisted by the government and a committee of mine owners. He failed, whereupon Silas, hereditary chief of the Moosehide Indians, staked his reputation that his tribal medicineman could do more wonders than all the paleface's science. Nature, through a remarkable coincidence, came to his assistance—with the unlooked-for results that the Yukon got all the rain it wanted, and that the entire tribe of Mooseh ides went back to the faith of their savage forefathers. "The facts are strictly as I relate them," writes the author. "I was at that time editor of the Yukon Daily World, and took a small part in the affair."

Calls for Cantaloupe.

"No matter how watermelon may be cut up or served in fancy style, it never tastes better than when placed before one in the good, old-fashioned southern slice," said a man in the Waldorf-Astoria the other night. "I would have it oftener, but no one feels more conspicuous than the man who calls for it and has his waiter approach in state with the huge, scarlet slice. It seems as if every one in the room turned to stare. It takes nerve to eat watermelon. As for cantaloupe and ice cream as a dessert, they are all right if a little apricot brandy is put into the melon before the ice cream. That blends the flavor delightfully."

were congregated in the shade of the trees far to the right. By the aid of his glasses he could see that one of their number was addressing them in an earnest, violent harangue. It was Von Blitz. From time to time faint sounds of shouts came across the valley.

Chase shuddered. He knew what it meant.

"How about Allah now, Selim?" he asked sententiously.

"Allah is great, Allah is good," mumbled the Moslem youth, but without heart.

"Do you think he can save me from those dogs?" asked the master, with a kindly smile.

"Sahib, do not go among them today," implored Selim impulsively.

"They are expecting me, Selim. If I don't come they will know that I have flunked. They'll know I am afraid of them."

"Do not go today," persisted Selim doggedly. Suddenly he started looking intently to the left along the line of the hill. Chase followed the direction of his gaze and uttered a sharp exclamation of surprise.

Several hundred yards away, outlined against the blue sky beyond the knob, stood the motionless figure of a horse and its rider, a woman in a green habit. She turned his her head and rode rapidly toward her. She had left the road to ride out upon the crest of the green knob. Chase was in the mood to curse her tenacity.

As he rode up over the slope she turned in the saddle to watch his approach. He had time to see that two grooms from the stables were in the road below her. She smiled as he drew up beside her, not noticing his momentary frown.

"So these are the fabulous mines of Japan?" she said gayly, without other greeting. "Where is the red glow from the rubies?"

"Who gave you permission to ride so far from the chateau?" he demanded, almost harshly. She looked at him in amazement.

"Am I a trespasser?" she asked coldly.

"I beg your pardon," he said quickly. "I did not mean to offend. Don't you know that it is not safe for you to"—

"Nonsense!" she exclaimed. "I am not afraid of your shadows. Why should they disturb me?"

"Look!" He pointed to the distant assemblage. "Those are not shadows. They are men, and they are making ready to transform themselves into beasts. Before long they will strike. Von Blitz and Rasula have sunk my warships. You must understand that it is dangerous to leave the chateau on such rides as this. Come! We will start back together at once."

"I protest, Mr. Chase, that you have no right to say what I shall do or"—

"It isn't a question of right. You are nearly ten miles from the chateau in the most unfrequented part of the island. Some day you will not return to your friends. It will be too late to hunt for you then."

"How very thrilling!" she said, with a laugh.

"I beg of you, do not treat it so lightly," he said, so sharply that she flashed. He was looking intently in the direction of the men. She was not slow to see that their position had been discovered by the miners. "Will you come with me now?"

"It seems so absurd! But I will come, of course. I have no desire to cause you any uneasiness."

As they rode swiftly back to the tree lined road a faint chorus of yells came to them across the valley. For some distance they rode without speaking a word to each other. They had traversed two miles of the soft dirt road before Chase discovered that Selim was the only man following them. The two men who had come out with the princess were not in sight.

"The dogs! So, you see, princess, your escort was not to be trusted," said Chase grimly.

"But they have stolen the horses," she murmured irrelevantly. "They belong to the chateau stables."

"Which direction did they take, Selim?"

"They rode off by the Carter's highway, excellency, toward Aratut."

"It may not appeal to your vanity, your highness, but it is my duty to inform you that they have gone to report our clandestine meeting."

"Clandestine! What do you mean, sir?"

"The islanders are watching me like hawks. Every time I am seen with any one from the chateau they add a fresh nail to the coffin they are preparing for me. It's really more serious than you imagine. I must therefore forbid you to ride outside of the park."

"I dare say you are right, Mr. Chase," she said at last, quite frankly. "I think you."

"I am glad that you understand," he said slowly. His gaze was set straight before him, keen, alert, anxious.

"I fought to fear, Mr. Chase," she said, with a faint smile, "that Lady Hepplegam had helped me in suggesting Japan as a rest cure. It may interest you to know that the count at Rabo-Thorberg has been very gay this winter. 'My brother, Christobal, has been with us after two years' absence. He came with his wife from the ends of the earth, and my father forgave him in good earnest. Christobal was very disobedient in the old days. He refused to marry the girl my father chose for him. Was it not foolish of him?"

"Not if it has turned out well in the end."

"I dare say it has—or will. She is delightful. My father loves her. And my father—the grand duke, I should say—does not love those who cross him. One is very fortunate to have been born a prince." He thought he detected a note of bitterness in this raillery.

"I can conceive of no greater fortune than to have been born Prince Karl of Brabetz," he said lightly. She flashed a quick glance at his face, her eyes narrowing in the effort to divine his humor.

"As I was saying," she resumed after a moment, "Lady Hepplegham has lured me from sun showers into the tempest. Mr. Chase"—and her face was suddenly full of real concern—"is there truly great danger?"

"I fear so," he answered. "It is only a question of hour. I have tried to check this uprising, but I've failed. Last night Von Blitz, Rasula and three others came to the bungalow and coolly informed me that my services were no longer required. I told them to go to"—

"I understand," she said quickly. "It required courage to tell them that." He smiled.

"They protested friendship, but I can read very well as I run. But can't we find something more agreeable to talk about? May I say that I have not seen a newspaper in three months? There must be news that you can give me. I am hungry for it."

"You poor man! No newspapers. Tell us, you don't know what has happened in all these months?"

"Nothing since before Christmas. Would you like to see a bit of news that I clipped from the last London paper that came into my hands?"

"Yes," she said, vaguely alarmed. He drew from his pocketbook and took from his interior a small bit of paper. She read it at a glance and handed it back. A faint touch of red came into her cheeks.

"How very odd! Why should you have kept that bit of paper all these months?"

"You have been married nearly three months," he said relentlessly—"three months and two days, to be precise."

She laughed outright, a bewitching, merry laugh that startled him.

"How accurate you would be!" she exclaimed. "It would be a highly interesting achievement, Mr. Chase, if it were only borne out by facts. You see, I have not been married so much as three minutes."

He stared at her, uncomprehending.

She went on, "Do you consider it bad luck to postpone a wedding?"

Involuntarily he drew his horse closer to hers. There was a new gleam in his eyes. Her boldness tempted the challenge they carried.

"Very bad luck," he said quite steadily, "for the bridegroom."

In an instant they seemed to understand something that had not even been considered before. She looked away, but he kept his eyes fast upon her half turned face, finding delight in the warm tint that surged so shamelessly to her brow. He wondered if she could hear the pounding of his heart above the thud of the horses' feet.

"We are to be married in June," she said, somewhat defiantly. Some of the light died in his eyes. "Prince Karl was very ill. They thought he might die. His—his studies—his nerves, I mean, proved more than he could carry. It—it is not serious. A nervous breakdown," she explained haltingly. "It was necessary to postpone the marriage. He will be quite well again, they say, by June."

"I hope he may be fully recovered, for your sake," he managed to say.

"Thank you." After a long pause she turned to him again and said, "We are to live in Paris for a year or two at least."

"He is in Paris now?"

"No," she answered, and that was all. He waited, but she did not expand her confidence.

"So it is to be in June," he mused.

"In June," she said quietly. He sighed.

"I am more than sorry that you are a princess," he said boldly.

"I am quite sure of that," she said so pointedly that he almost gasped. She was in high good humor, the mischievous gleam in her dark eyes this taugh was as awkward as hers was charming.

"Will you come with me now?"

"You do like to be flattered," he exclaimed at random. "And I shall take it upon myself to add to today's measure." He again drew forth his pocketbook. She looked on curiously. "Permit me to restore the lace handkerchief which you dropped some time ago. I've been keeping it for myself, but"—

"My handkerchief?" she gasped, her thoughts going at once to that ridiculous incident of the balcony. "It must belong to Lady Deppingham."

"Oh, it isn't the one you used on the balcony," he protested coolly. "It antedates that adventure."

"Balcony? I don't understand you," she contested.

"Then you are exceedingly obtuse."

"I never dreamed that you could see," she confessed pathetically.

"It was extremely nice in you and very presumptuous in me. But, your highness, this is the handkerchief you dropped in the castle garden six months ago. Do you recognize the perfume?"

"You are very sentimental," she said at last. "Would you care to keep it? It is of no value to me."

"Thanks! I will keep it."

"I've changed my mind," she said inconsequently, stuffing the fabric in her gauntlet. "You have something else in that pocketbook that I should very much like to possess."

"It can't be that Bank of England"—

"No, no! You wrapped it in a bit of paper last week and placed it there for safe keeping."

"You mean the bullet?"

"Yes. I should like it to show to my friends, you know, when I tell them how near you were to being shot." Without a word he gave her the bullet that had dropped at his feet on that first day at the chateau. "Thank you. Oh, isn't it a horrid thing? Just to think, it might have struck you!" She shuddered.

He was about to answer in his delirium when a clattering in the road brought them in view of the chateau. On a line the grooms ahead of them were riding slowly, intently toward the east. They caught sight of themselves. The princess turned toward Chase and said, "So princesses can't run away, even if they want to, can they?" It was an easy matter to recognize them. The glad exclamation from the princess as she saw them and a peculiar smile disappearing from his lips.

"I know what you are thinking," she cried impulsively. "You are wrong, very wrong, Mr. Chase. Lady Deppingham is a fine companion and a true friend. It is still almost impossible that she can be seriously engaged in a"—

"I didn't think, princess," he interrupted, a dark look in his eyes. "I was merely wondering whether or not Mrs. Browne is as happy as she might be."

Genevra was silent for a moment.

"I had not thought of that," she said soberly.

His Nightcap Privilege.

Among the many strange privileges granted by English sovereigns to their subjects probably the most remarkable was the permission given to the Earl of Sussex by Queen Mary to wear his nightcap, or even two nightcaps, if he so wished, in her royal presence. The earl was a victim of colds in the head which, like the law, are no respecters of persons, and as he considered catarrh in the head too heavy a price to pay for loyalty he petitioned the queen for permission to wear his nightcap in her presence.

The patent conceding this unique privilege is one of the most amusing in royal annals. It runs thus: "Know ye that we do give to our beloved and trusty cousin and counselor, Henry, earl of Sussex, Viscount Fitzwalter and lord of Egremund and Purnell, license and pardon to wear his cap or nightcap or any two of them, at his pleasure, as well in our presence as in the presence of any other person or persons within this realm or any other place in our dominions wheresoever during his life, and these our letters shall be sufficient warrant in his behalf."

About Matches.

John Walker, an English chemist, was experimenting in 1827 with an inflammable mixture for use on shipboard. One day Walker happened to rub a stick dipped in this mixture across a table. There was a report—the stick took fire, and because John Walker was no fool the match was born. The match's inventor put his wonderful invention on the market in April, 1827. The Walker match was as big as a lead pencil, and it cost a shilling a box. Because it could only be lighted by drawing it through a piece of sandpaper folded in two the Holden match supplanted it in 1833. The Holden was a lucifer. It ignited more easily than the Walker, so it put the Walker out of business. Sweden is today the home of the match industry. Sweden exports annually about 2,000,000,000 boxes of incomparable matches. But there is no statue to John Walker.—Ex Sarge.

There was an inn near by. It was only just an inn, but it was an inn. The landlord growled when he asked for a room, but at last conceded it. They put his motor in the garage among the mangel wurzels.

A minute later he was leaning over the balustrade.

"Landlord!" he yelled. "Landlord! Do you think I'm going to clean my own boots?"

"Wot's up?" called back mine aurly host.

"What's up? Why, what's that boot polishing pad on my bed for?"

"Polishin' pad?" roared back the landlord. "That's not a polishin' pad, young feller. That's the pillow!"—London Scraps.

A Hallowe'en supper and party was given in honor of the foot ball boys, at the home of Caro Meech, Saturday evening, October 30, by girls who attended the foot ball game at Petoskey the week before.

The house was decorated with jack-o-lanterns, corn stalks, and apples which were hanging from every archway. The dining room which was filled promptly at 6:30 p. m. by nineteen boys, was decorated with the athletic colors, red and white. The boys after partaking of a three course supper which was prepared for them departed to the parlor where they sang songs and told stories till the girls were ready to entertain. Hand painted place cards was given to each boy as a souvenir.

After supper Mr. Miller, the science teacher, offered his services as fortune teller and was very soon surrounded by the girls. The boys determined their fate by means of a pumpkin carved with initials which was suspended from an archway.

The boys were also given slips of paper which directed them to five different places about the house, and at the end of their search they were rewarded by a box of home made candy.

The party broke up at 10:30, everyone declaring it to be a most enjoyable affair.

Literary Notes

Choosing a Christmas Present

When you make a present of a periodical to a friend or a family you are really selecting a companion to influence them for good or ill during a whole year. If the acquaintances of your sons and daughters were to talk to them about as some periodicals talk to them silently, how quickly you would forbid the companionship! In the one case as in the other, the best course is to supplant the injurious with something equally attractive and at the same time "worth while." A food can be wholesome and utterly distasteful. Reading can be made so too. But The Youth's Companion not only nourishes the mind, but delights it, just like that ideal human associate whom you would choose. The Youth's Companion fills that place now in more than half a million homes. Can you not think of another family in which it is not now known where it would be joyfully welcomed?

If the $1.75 for the 1910 Volume is sent now, the new subscriber will be entitled to all the remaining issues of 1909. If desired the publisher will hold these back or send them at Christmas time, together with the Christmas Number and The Companion's new "Venetian" Calendar for 1910, lithographed in thirteen colors and gold.

An Opportunity to Secure Both Knowledge and Entertainment

With big crops, fat bank accounts and with prosperity reigning supreme in every country home, it is the duty of every farmer to look around for opportunities whereby his children can gain impressions that will prove beneficial to them through life and if by taking advantage of these, he can, at the same time, secure for himself and his good wife much needed rest and recreation, it would seem that such an opportunity should appeal to him. This opportunity is offered in connection with the International Live Stock Exposition which will be held in Chicago from November 27 to December 10. The champions of the leading shows of the world, in fact, the finest specimens of cattle, horses, sheep and swine that the world produces will here compete for supremacy and final honors. Do you know what this means? Can you realize what a liberal education such a collection produced by the world's foremost feeders and breeders means to your boys?

The best brains, the greatest masters of the live stock industry, the foremost live stock specialists will here demonstrate what can be accomplished, and shrewd farmers will begin to think of these things and endeavor to make arrangements so that they can profit by the teachings of this great International Exposition.

The coming show gives promise of being the greatest of this splendid series of events, and the management is planning to offer a program that will far eclipse anything that has ever been offered in the past—delightful music, dashing performances and brilliant evening entertainments, combined with educational opportunities unequalled in the World. Where can a greater combination be found at such a nominal outlay of money. Education, entertainment, a pleasure trip and recreation—all in one. Why not plan a pleasant surprise for the folks at home and take advantage of these exceptional opportunities?

AFTER HALF A CENTURY.

As the "battle of the bottle" wages fiercely in every section of the country, with almost unvarying defeat for the bottle, the liquor interests rally for periodical onslaughts upon Maine, as the stronghold of prohibition. If the no-license policy could be discredited in Maine, if Maine politicians could be induced to repudiate the system maintained in opposition to the liquor interests for more than half a century, the cause of prohibition generally would, in the opinion of its opponents, receive a body blow. Therefore loud and insistent emphasis is laid upon every opinion unfavorable to prohibition in the state of Maine. Most of these opinions will not stand the test of investigation; they are sold for the purposes of publication. However, there are men in Maine, as in every other state, who may honestly differ on matters of state policy, and whose motives in the mercenary sense, are above question.

A case in point is the position of of Mr. Charles F. Libby, a former mayor of Portland, whose recent election as president of the American Bar Association lends weight to his anti-prohibition utterances, a fact now being duly exploited in the pro-liquor press. It would be singular, indeed, considering the long established custom of social drinking, if not a single man of prominence could be found in a prohibition state to defend the personal-liberty code of ethics, in the matter of drinking, of which all too many men are exponents. The Portland Evening Express deals with the subject in the following dignified and incontrovertible argument. It should serve to silence those critics who refuse to consider the policy of prohibition in the abstract:

The great mass of the people in Maine believe from their own experience that a wise public policy demands that the state refuse to sanction and protect the liquor traffic by its laws. It is a fact of great weight in this connection that practically every student of the economic problem having to do with the control of the evil of the liquor traffic sooner or later reaches the conclusion that the state does wrong when it issues a license to the traffic and undertakes to protect it in a business which leads to degeneracy, criminality, pauperism and insanity.

The roll call of the men of eminence that Maine has given to the world shows a verdict so nearly unanimous as to be astonishing, in favor of the policy in which this state was a pioneer and which it has followed for half a century in outlawing the traffic. Almost every public man of note in fifty years of state history has gone on record against the license system. Practically every governor from Anson P. Morrill's day to the present one, every member of Congress now, and almost all of their predecessors during the last generation, are and have been outspoken advocates of the policy of prohibition.

Bulletin of Information as to Work Planned and Work is Well Under Way—Charlevoix Exhibit

If anyone has the idea that there is no interest among the members of the grange in this section concerning the coming meeting of the State grange at Traverse City, he has made a serious mistake, for Charlevoix county will be there "500 Hundred Strong," and committees have the work well in hand. R. H. Elsworth, chairman of the publicity committee, has mailed out the following communication:

"It is a significant fact in connection with the general campaign for the advertisement of the northern part of western Michigan that the 1909 session of the Michigan State grange is to be held in Traverse City, For thirty-six years the meetings of this organization have been laid in the larger cities in the southern part of the state. The precedent of thirty-six years standing, however, was broken and the people of the Grand Traverse region are preparing to prove to those who will visit them from the south that the granges of Northwestern Michigan are as enterprising as any in the country, and that this part of the state is fast becoming second to none as an agricultural and horticultural section.

"The first proposition is to be made clear by the maturing of plans for the largest and most successful state session ever held. Among the new features to be introduced will be that of the decoration of the convention hall with products of the farm.

"The wealth producing power of our agricultural lands is to be demonstrated by a collection of photographs of rural scenes and an exhibit of the products of the soil. The past summer the grangers have been securing farm and orchard views and now they are collecting the best that their farms have produced in order to make a showing that will surprise the delegates from the southern counties.

"The granges of Charlevoix county are arranging for a special county exhibit and they have sent out word that they will be in Traverse City at the state meeting 500 strong to back up their exhibit and to make a Charlevoix demonstration.

"Traverse City is preparing for the reception of 2,000 visitors for grange week. She expects to do her best toward making the strangers believe that they are in the hands of their friends. If it is possible the strangers will be so impressed that they will return to their home and give glowing accounts of the wonderful land that they had visited and the right royal good people that they met."

DEATH OF MRS. WEIDERMAN

Occurred at Her Home on Mason Street Thursday Morning

Mrs. Christopher Weiderman, living on Mason street west, died at her home of a paralytic stroke last Thursday morning at 11:00 o'clock, aged 55 years. She is survived by three daughters, Miss Clara Weiderman, Mrs. Dell Datcher, Mrs. William Gear and three sons, Messers. John, Edward and Grover Weiderman all of this city. One son died in infancy.

Mrs. Weiderman was born at Mackinaw Island, March 17, 1853, where she spent her early girlhood days. On September 6, 1873, she was united in marriage with Christopher Weiderman, locating at South Fox Islands. At this place her husband died July 13, 1888, she then moved to Westport where she made her home until the spring of 1902, when she removed to Charlevoix.

Funeral services were held at the home Sunday afternoon at one o'clock, Rev. F. M. Taylor of the Methodist church, officiating, with interment in the Charlevoix cemetery. Besides the family she leaves many warm friends to mourn her loss.

NOTES OF WARNING TO ALL HUNTERS

Do Not Shoot Unless Sure of What You Shoot at

CARELESSNESS IN USE OF WEAPONS

May Lead to the Death of Yourself or Your Friend.

And Result in Something That a Lifetime of Regret Cannot Undo or Erase.

The time of year is now at hand when men go into the woods armed with high power guns and a license to kill deer. Occasionally a mistake is made and a fellow hunter is the victim or the hunter himself falls by his own weapon.

That the case of Harry Shubrick of Cedar, near Traverse City, whose dead body was found in the woods last week, and who lost his life by an accidental discharge of his gun, is none the less sad because it should not have happened. There must have been some carelessness else the lifeless body would not have been found and there would not be sorrow in the home desolated by the death of the husband and father. Very possible, the young man was familiar with the woods and the ways of the weapon he carried, but a moment of carelessness cost him his life.

This same carelessness leads a man to pull a gun through a fence or over an obstruction. It leads him to stand on a stump and look around, dropping the butt of his gun and receiving the contents of the shell in his person. It causes him to fire at a moving bush and inflict death or injury upon another hunter. It makes him shoot at what he thinks is a deer when it may be another hunter who is clad in a brown hunting jacket. If the hunter knew, instead of thought, that he was shooting at a bird or animal, the toll of the hunting season would not be so bloody.

It's this element of carelessness that often makes what otherwise

DEATH CAME SUDDENLY

Antoine Sharow Stricken by Death at Door of Home

Was at Work in Field During Day—Funeral Held Friday.

Last Wednesday afternoon the residents of Charlevoix were shocked to hear of the sudden death of Antoine Sharow, one of the pioneer residents of this county.

Mr. Sharow had been at work on his place a half mile from his home during the day and about four o'clock in the afternoon told his hired man he had to go home, stating he would like to stay but could not. People who saw him on his way to his home state that he seemed well and that he showed no indications of sickness. As he neared the gate, he seemed to be suffering and walked the remaining distance to the house bent forward as if in great pain.

He called to his wife, who had just returned from down town, to call the doctor, stating that he was very sick, and dropped to the ground just as he reached the porch steps. Mrs. Sharow immediately went to the phone and summoned Dr. Armstrong, after which she returned to where Mr. Sharow was lying, but he was dead before she reached him.

Antoine Sharow was born in Canada, March 1, 1312. When he was one years old his father died, and until he was twenty-one years of age he lived among strangers. He was married to Lydia Benway, March 4, 1871, at the age of twenty-nine years. He leaves besides his wife, three sons, Antoine Jr., who lives on the Norwood road, Louie and Berl, who live in Charlevoix, and one daughter.

Mr. Sharow was well and favorably known throughout the county. When he was thirty-five years of age he worked at Norwood for F. J. Meech, and left his employ to attend school and get an education. He attended school three months with his daughter, and during the next three months obtained the only schooling he ever had. He then moved from Norwood to Elk Rapids, and later from there to Charlevoix.

On Friday night, June 22, 1887, he was aboard the Steamer Champlain which burned off Smithson's Camp at which time many Charlevoix citizens lost their lives.

The funeral was held Friday from the Methodist church, Rev. F. M. Taylor officiating, and was buried at Brookside. The pallbearers were C. R. Bellinger, W. W. Washburn, John Dougherty, John Page, Mr. Herrington and L. H. Wheeler.

MET WITH PENINSULA

Charlevoix County Pomona Grange Held Meeting Thursday

Attendence Good—Worthy Master Ward Not a Candidate for Re-election

Charlevoix County Pomona grange met with Peninsula grange Thursday, and the attendance was good considering the busy time of year. Nearly all of the officers were present.

The worthy master and executive committee were authorized to enter into contract with the Pere Marquette railroad for a special train to carry Charlevoix county patrons to the State grange at Traverse City, December 4.

A class of six candidates were initiated into the sixth degree, and arrangements made for a special meeting to be held at Ironton about the first of December, for the purpose of initiating a large class in the sixth degree, and arrangements were made for special meeting to be held at Ironton the first of December, for the purpose of initiating a large class in the fifth degree.

Worthy Master Ward reported that all arrangements were well under way for a record breaking exhibit at the meeting of the State Grange at Traverse City.

During the meeting, E. B. Ward, who has been master of Charlevoix Pomona Grange for the the past seventeen years, announced that he will not be a candidate for re-election, stating that he had been at the helm long enough and that there were other patrons who would fill the chair as well as he had tried to do during the past years.

The next regular meeting will be held with South Arm Grange, December 30, at which time the officers will be elected for the ensuing term.

BAD MIDNIGHT BLAZE

McKinnon House on Park Avenue, Gutted by Fire.

Thursday morning at about two o'clock fire was discovered in the McKinnon house, on Park avenue, formerly occupied by County Clerk D. S. Payton, but at this time no occupied with the exception of some furniture stored there by McKinnon.

By the time the fire department reached the house the entire second story was in flames, but was gotten under control in a short time. The origin of the fire is unknown, but as Mr. McKinnon was in the house during the afternoon and had a fire in the stove, it probably caught fire from sparks from the stove pipe in the second story.

The house was insured for $1100 and contents for $900. The contents were totally destroyed and all the upper part of the house.

"A GILDED YOUTH"

Played by Dramatic Club in Creditable Manner.

"A Gilded Youth," which was given at the Charlevoix Theatre last Monday evening by the Charlevoix Dramatic Club, proved a success in every way, each member playing their parts surprisingly well.

Bessie Cohen, in the role of leading soubrette, pleased everyone by her ease of manner and grace in rendering her part.

Ainslee Mayne, as the "Gilded Youth," was true to life in the character he represented, and knew just how to bring out the humor of his part.

Mae Feltz, in the part of the Colonel's sister, did exceptionally well and caused much laughter.

Sam Levinson had a difficult part, but proved himself capable of rendering it in a very creditalde manner.

Henry Partridge as Col. Culpepper, did very well.

The specialties and songs were give as advertised, and all were well rendered.

One credit should be given Mrs. Jarvis for her training and the care she took in preparing every detail of the play.

MORE FARMERS THE LESS TAXES

Charlevoix County Average Tax Rate $28.69 in 1907

SHOULD ENCOURAGE DEVELOPMENT

Lowest Tax Rate in the Agricultural Counties.

"A Farmer for Every Forty" Campaign Promises Lower Rate of Taxation.

A developed region means less taxes. That is the rule. To be sure there are exceptions. A lower tax rate is certainly a legitimate reason for encouraging development, for encouraging development of western Michigan, to be specific.

The ten counties of the state of Michigan having the lowest tax rates for the year 1907 were, in order of their lowness, Macomb, Monroe, Branch, Clinton, Livingston, Lenawee, Keweenaw, Oakland, Washtenaw and Barry. All but one of the ten counties, Keweenaw, are in southern Michigan and are known as agricultural districts.

The average rate of taxation for the ten counties was $13.16 for all taxes in 1907 per $1000 of valuation. The average for the entire state of Michigan that year was $17.62. Better than 87 per cent of the total acreage of these ten counties is in farms.

The ten counties having the highest tax rates in 1907 were in the order of their highness: Schoolcraft, Ontonagan, Iron, Gladwin, Missaukee, Alger, Iosco, Arenac, Alcona, Clare. Not one of these counties is truly an agricultural county. The average tax rate for the ten counties was in 1907, $30.21. The amount of the total acreage in farms in these ten counties is less than 11 per cent.

The above facts in brief are:

Ten counties with 87.6 per cent of their land in farms have an average tax rate of about $13 per thousand.

Ten counties with only 10.8 per cent of their acres in farms have an average rate of about $30 per thousand.

HIGH SCHOOL TEAM OUTPLAYS ALUMNI'S

Puts it Over Older Team By Score of 5 to 0

BOTH TEAMS SHOWED UP WELL

But Lack of Practice and Training on Part of Alumni's Cause of Defeat

The High School Team Will Play East Jordan at This Place Saturday—Good Game Looked for

After all their hopes and aspirations the Alumni were forced to let their younger foes put one over them Saturday to the tune of 5 to 0, in one of the most interesting games played here this season. With all their experience, with all their weight and knowledge of the game, Wilson's portoges simply outclassed their opponents, especially in knowing the new game. Lack of training and practice were the cause of the defeat, for no team can play a fast game without these.

The first half was started by the high school kicking off it took just twelve minutes for a touchdown to be put over and that was by Carey. By the way, it might be added that Carey played the game of his life and time after time went through the Alumni's line for gains. Nothing else unusual happened in the first half. The high school played for their opponents wind and they got it. Failure to kick the goal left the score at five.

Both teams started the second half by playing real football. Duggan was plainly in evidence because of his playing, as was also Wallace, who showed up well, especially in quarter back runs. Hull played good ball as did the team as a whole, especially on defensive. This was shown in the second half when the Alumni had worked the ball up to within one yard of their goal, but that was as far as they got. The ball was lost on downs and the high school team got it out of danger by punting. This was the only time that the goal was in danger. Alumni was penalized five yards for off side playing.

With five more minutes to play the high school had the ball within 15 yards of their line and it looked very much like another touchdown, but this was not to be for soon the ball went soaring down the field and all hopes faded.

Bedford started once for a jaunt up the field for a touchdown, but all were not in favor of this and he was tackled, much to his sorrow, after he had traversed 35 yards.

No scores were made in this half and the high school had to be satisfied with five. The half closed with the ball on the Alumni's thirty yard line.

Levinson, Campbell, Miller and Bedford played well for the Alumni and in fact, all the back field showed they knew how to play ball.

Next Saturday comes the game with East Jordan. If the team can win this game along with the one with Traverse City, it can be ranked among the best teams in this section of the state, although it has been defeated before this.

It is the boast of East Jordan that they are coming over here with the intention of teaching the boys here a few things, but according to dope all the fellows are game enough to learn and when Saturday p. m. comes it is safe to say that East Jordan will have to play a little better ball than Charlevoix does before her boast comes true.

HELPFUL HINTS ON HAIR HEALTH

Scalp and Hair Troubles Generally Caused by Carelessness

Dandruff is a contagious disease caused by a microbe which also produces baldness. Never use a comb or brush belonging to some one else. No matter how cleanly the owner may be, these articles may be infected with microbes, which will infect your scalp. It is far easier to catch hair microbes than it is to get rid of them, and a single stroke of an infected comb or brush may well lead to baldness. Never try on anybody else's hat. Many a hatband is a resting place for microbes.

If you happen to be troubled with dandruff, itching scalp, falling hair or baldness, we have a remedy which we believe will completely relieve these troubles. We are so sure of this that we offer it to you with the understanding that it will cost you nothing for the trial if it does not produce the results we claim. This remedy is called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. We honestly believe it to be the most scientific remedy for scalp and hair troubles, and we know of nothing else that equals it for effectiveness, because of the results it has produced in thousands of cases.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is devised to banish dandruff, restore natural color when its loss has been brought about by disease, and make the hair naturally silky soft and glossy. It does this because it stimulates the hair follicles, destroys the germ matter and brings about a free, healthy circulation of blood, which nourishes the hair roots, causing them to tighten and grow new hair. We want everybody who has any trouble with hair or scalp to know that Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is the best hair tonic and restorative in existence, and no one should scoff at or doubt this statement until they have put our claims to a fair test, with the understanding that they pay us nothing for the remedy if it does not give full and complete satisfaction in every particular. Two sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store, The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store. A. H. Floreschet, proprietor.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE BURNING OF THE BUNGALOW.

He went in and had tiffin with them in the hanging garden. Deppingham was surly and preoccupied. Drusilla Browne was unusually vivacious. At best she was not volatile; her greatest accomplishment lay in the ability to appreciate what others had to say.

Her husband, aside from a natural anxiety, was the same blithe optimist as ever. He showed no sign of restraint, no evidence of compunction. Chase found himself secretly speculating on the state of affairs. Were the two heirs working out a preconceived plan, or were they, after all, playing with the fires of spring?

Immediately after tiffin Genevra carried Lady Deppingham off to her room. When they came forth for a proposed stroll in the grounds Lady Agnes was looking very meek and tearful, while the princess had about her the air of one who has conquered by gentleness.

"It has been so appallingly dull, Genevra, don't you understand? That's why. Besides, it isn't necessary for her to be so horrid about it. She"—

"She isn't horrid about it, dear. She's most self sacrificing."

"Rubbish! She talks about the Puritans and all that sort of thing. I know what she means. But there's no use talking about it. I'll do as you say—command, I mean. I'll try to be a prude—Heaven alone knows what a real prude is. I don't. All this tommyrot about Bobby and me wouldn't exist if that wretched Chase man had been a little more affable. He never noticed us until you came. No wife to snoop after him and—why, my dear, he would have been ideal."

"It's all very nice, Agnes, but you forget your husband," said Genevra, with a tolerant smile.

"Genevra," said Lady Agnes solemnly, "if you'd been on a barren island for five months as I have with nothing to look at but your husband and the sunsets you would not be so hard on me. I wouldn't take Drusilla's husband away from her for the world. I wouldn't even look at him if he were not on the barren island too. I've read novels in which a man and woman have been wrecked on a desert island and lived there for months, even years, in an atmosphere of righteousness. My dear, those novelists are ninnies. Nobody could be so good as all that without getting wings. I'm tired of men and angels. That's why I want you for awhile. You've got no wings, Genevra, but it's of no consequence, as you have no one to fly away from."

"Or to, you might add," laughed Genevra.

"That's very American. You've been talking to Miss Pelham. She's always adding things. By the way, Mr. Chase sees quite a lot of her. She types for him. I fancy she's trying to choose between him and Mr. Saunders.—If you were she, dear, which would you choose?"

"Mr. Saunders," said Genevra promptly. "But if I were myself I'd choose Mr. Chase."

"Speaking of angels, he must have wings a yard long. He has been chosen by an entire harem and he flies from them as if pursued by the devil. I imagine, however, that he'd be rather dangerous if his wings were to get out of order unexpectedly. But he's nice, isn't he?"

The princess nodded her head tolerantly.

Her ladyship went on: "I don't want to walk, after all. Let us sit here in the corridor and count the prisms in the chandeliers. It's such fun. I've done it often. Mr. Britt has advanced a new theory. We are to indulge in double barreled divorce proceedings. As soon as they are over Mr. Browne and I are to marry. Then we are to hurry up and get another divorce. Then we marry our own husband and wife all over again. Isn't it exciting? Only, of course, it isn't going to happen. It would be so frightfully improper—shocking, don't you know. You see, I should go on living with my divorced husband even after I was married to Bobby. I'd be obliged to do that in order to give Bobby grounds for a divorce as soon as the estate is settled. But Deppy has put his foot down hard. He says he had trouble enough getting me to marry him the first time. He won't go through it again. Of course it's utter nonsense!"

"A little nonsense now and then is"—began the princess and paused amiably.

"Is Mr. Chase to stay for lunch?" asked Lady Agnes irrelevantly.

"How should I know? I am not his hostess."

"Holly tolly! I've never known you to look like that before. A little dash of red sets your cheeks off"— But Genevra threw up her hands in despair and started toward the stairway, her chin tilted high. Lady Agnes, laughing softly, followed. "It's too bad she's down to marry that horrid little Brabetz," she said to herself, with a sudden wistful glance at the proud, vibrant, lovable creature ahead. "She deserves a better fate than that."

Genevra waited for her at the head of the stairway.

"Agnes, I'd like you to promise that you will keep your avaricious claws off Mrs. Browne's husband," she said seriously.

"I'll try, my dear," said Lady Agnes meekly.

When they reached the garden they found Deppingham smoking furiously and quite alone. Chase had left some time before to give warning to the English bank that trouble might be expected. The shadow of disappointment that flitted across Genevra's face was not observed by the others. Bobby Browne and his wife were off strolling in the lower end of the park.

"Poor old Deppy!" cried his wife. "I've made up my mind to be exceedingly nice to you for a whole day."

"I suppose I ought to beat you," he said slowly.

"Beat me? Why, pray?"

"I received an anonymous letter this morning telling me of your goings on with Bobby Browne," said he easily.

A dark, saturnine face appeared

"It was slick under my door by Bromley, who said that Miss Pelham gave it to her. Miss Pelham referred me to Mr. Britt, and Mr. Britt urged me to keep the letter for future reference. I think he said it could be used as Exhibit A. Then he advised me to beat you only in the presence of witnesses."

"The whole household must be going mad," cried Genevra, with a laugh.

"Oh, if something only would happen!" exclaimed her ladyship. "A riot, a massacre—anything! It all sounds like a farce to you, Genevra, but you haven't been here for five months, as we have."

As they moved away from the vine covered nook in the garden a hand parted the leaves in the balcony above, and the dark, saturnine face of a turbaned servant appeared behind it. The secret espionage had been going on for days in the chateau. Scarcely a move was made or a word spoken by the wildest people that escaped the attraction of the swarthy spy. And, curiously enough, the spies were no longer reporting the secrets to Hollingsworth Chase.

The secret passed. Hollingsworth Chase now realized that he no longer had authority over the natives. Rasula made the reports for the islanders and took charge of the statements from the bank.

Every morning Chase rode boldly into the town, transacted what business he could, talked with the thoroughly disturbed bankers and then defiantly made his way to the chateau. He was in love, with the princess desperately in love. He understood perfectly—for he was a man of the world and cosmopolitan—that nothing could come of it. She was a princess, and she was not in a story book; she could not marry him.

So far as Genevra was concerned, on her part it could mean no more than a diversion, a condescension to coquetry, a simple flirtation; it meant the passing of a few days, the killing of time, the pleasure of gentle conquest, and then—forgetfulness. All this he knew.

At first she revolted against the court he so plainly paid to her in these last few days. It was bold, conscienceless, impertinent. She avoided him, she treated him to a short season of disdain; she did all in her power to rebuke his effrontery—and then in the end she decided to give him as good as he sent in this brief battle of folly. It mattered little who came off with the fewest scars, for in a fortnight or two they would go their separate ways, no better, no worse, for the conflict. And, after all, it was very dull in those last days, and he was very attractive and very brave and very gallant and, above all, very sensible.

They rode together in the park every morning, keeping well out of range of marksmen in the hills. Their conflict was with the eyes, the tone of the voice, the intervals of silence; no touch of the hand—nothing except the struggles of Eros.

What did it matter if a few dead impulses, a few crippled ideals, a few blasted hopes, were left strewn upon the battlefield at the end of the fortnight? What did anything matter so long as Prince Karl of Brabetz was not there?

One night toward the end of this week of enchanting rencounters—this week of effort to uncover the vulnerable spot in the other's armor—Genevra stood leaning upon the rail which inclosed the hanging garden. She was gazing abstractedly into the black night, out of which far away blinked the light in the bungalow. It was the first night in a week that he had missed coming to the chateau.

She missed him. She was lonely.

He had told her of the meeting that was to be held at the bungalow that night at which he was to be asked to deliver over to Rasula's committee the papers, the receipts and the memoranda that he had accumulated during his months of employment in their behalf. She had a feeling of dread—a nameless, sweet feeling that she could not explain except that under all of it lay the proud consciousness that he was a man who had courage, a man who was not afraid.

"How silly I am!" she said half aloud in her abstraction.

She turned her gaze away from the blinking light in the hills, a queer, guilty smile on her lips.

Across the garden from where she was playing herself bitterly Lady Deppingham's husband was saying in low, agitated tones to Bobby Browne's wife:

"Now, see here, Drusilla, I'm not saying that our—that is, Lady Deppingham and Bobby—are accountable for what has happened, but that doesn't make it any more pleasant. It's of little consequence who is trying to poison us, don't you know, and all that. They wouldn't do it, I'm sure, but somebody is! That's what I mean, d'ye see? Lady Dep"—

"I know my husband wouldn't—couldn't do such a thing, Lord Deppingham," came from Drusilla's stiff lips almost as a moan. She was very miserable.

"Of course not, my dear Drusilla," he protested nervously. Then suddenly, as his eye caught what he considered a suspicious movement of Bobby's hand as he placed a card close to Lady Deppingham's fingers: "Demme, I—I'd rather he wouldn't! But I beg your pardon, Drusilla! It's all perfectly innocent."

"Of course it's innocent!" whispered Drusilla fiercely.

"It's utter nonsense for us to suspect them of— Pray don't be so upset, Drusilla. It's all right."

"As if you think I am worrying over your wife's harmless affair with my husband you are very much mistaken."

Deppingham was silent for a long time.

"I don't sleep at all these nights," he said at last miserably. She could not feel sorry for him. She could only feel for herself and her sleepless nights. "Drusilla, do—do you think they want to get rid of us? We're the obstacles, you know. We can't help it, but we are. Somebody put that pill in my tea today—it must have been a servant. It couldn't have been—er"—

"My husband, sir!"

"No; my wife. You know, Drusilla, she's not that sort. She has a horror of death and"— He stopped and wiped his brow pathetically.

"If the servants are trying to poison any of us, Lord Deppingham, it is reasonable to suspect that your wife and my husband are the ones they want to dispose of, not you and me. I don't believe it was poison you found in your tea, but if it was it was intended for one of the heirs."

"Can't something be done?" she cried.

"Well, there's some consolation in that," said Deppy, smiling for the first time.

would be a healthful and pleasant recreation merely a recital of accidents ending in bloodshed and death. Careless handling of weapons, careless discharging of them, careless firing of high powered ammunition, in fact, almost any instance where thought is not taken, may result in something that a lifetime of regret cannot undo or erase.

Not only are the amateurs to blame, though they are the most prolific source of danger as occasionally even the veteran forgets and swells the grim total. True there is less danger for others in the actions of the old hunter; its himself that generally suffers after he grows careless, but his own life and person are just as much value as those of someone else.

It is this element of carelessness and this alone that is to blame for the sorrow and trouble that has come out of the woods, not alone in Michigan, but in every state where there is game to hunt, as well.

WINS FIFTY YEAR FIGHT WITH FIRE

Coal Worth $2,000,000,000 Saved by Engineer.

MANY PLANS TRIED IN VAIN.

Success Comes Finally With Building of Concrete Wall, Cutting Off From Flames Main Body of Threatened Fuel In Gigantic "Thumb."

In order to save 400,000,000 tons of coal from a mine that had been burning half a century one of the most remarkable operations in the history of American engineering has just been completed at Marsh Chunk, Pa.

The fire was discovered in the mines on Feb. 19, 1859. During all the time it has been raging, while two generations were coming and going, it has consumed 10,000,000 tons of coal, estimated to be worth $25,000,000.

Successive administrations of the company owning the land have recognized that the greatest service they could do the company was to stop the progress of the flames before they finally got into the main deposit and destroyed all the coal.

Coal Worth Billions In Danger.

Four hundred million tons of that lay in danger, and this represented a value of $2,000,000,000.

It was a stake well worth playing for and well worth exerting the last atom of ingenuity and spending a fortune in cash if the advance of the flames could be checked.

One plan after another was tried by engineer after engineer, but the result was always the same—failure and a big outlay of money for which no return could be shown.

In the early stages the blunder was made of attempting to subdue the flames with water, but this only made the situation worse. The water coming in contact with the flames produced explosions that cracked the coal open and made new paths along which the fire could make its way.

Sometimes the fire would slow up a bit, and engineers would get the idea that they had succeeded. On one occasion, indeed, it seemed to have stopped altogether, but just when this hope dawned the flames broke out afresh in still more powerful volume, and the sacrifice of valuable coal land went on unabated.

Gigantic "Thumb" of Coal.

Only one fortunate circumstance came to the aid of the man who has now finally succeeded in making the winning fight against the fire, W. A. Lathrop. This is the shape of the deposit. The general shape of the Panther creek coal basin has been likened to that of a man's hand, with the thumb extended and the other fingers held together. The spur that marks the thumb extends to Summit Hill, and at the end of the thumb the slope was originally opened up.

The point where the fire started fifty years ago was on the outside of the thumb. It has taken fifty years for the flames to eat up this giant thumb, but after the accomplishment of the job the next step of the work of devastation could be to get into the main part of the hand.

Once into the hand there would have been nothing to stop the progress, and 400,000,000 tons of coal must inevitably have been sacrificed.

But there is where science, in the person of Engineer Lathrop, came to the rescue. In addition to being an expert on engineering subjects Mr. Lathrop is also the president of the company, and he has been for a long time devoting himself to study of the subject in order to save the great coal deposit.

He first tried in vain the plan of "slushing holes." Long borings were made across the spur and headway of the rapidly moving flames. It was difficult work, for the heat was great, and the men who gave the battle had to be constantly renewed.

Those 75-foot holes were driven down to the water level and were then filled with mud, the idea being to form a barrier of wet clay between the fire and the main coal deposit.

Slush No Bar to Flames.

The deepest of the holes was so deep that it took 8,000 tons of the slush to fill it. But ten times that much would have proved unavailing. The flames went right through the slush the same as if it had been so much combustible material.

In December, 1908, the fire went through the last of the mud defenses and brought Mr. Lathrop to the decision that only one thing could save the main coal deposit. A solid concrete wall must be placed ahead of the flames.

This was to be built exactly on the same lines as the fireproof wall that guards a dwelling—for instance, a theater.

Only in this case was presented the enormously difficult project of sinking such a wall 175 feet deep into the earth. It had to be twelve feet thick to make sure that no flame could get through it, and in order to make a long enough contact to the flames, something that they could not work around, it was necessary to have 1,050 feet of it, or nearly one-fifth of a mile.

To solve problem it was found that 175 feet of depth was not enough, and the wall had to be carried down to a depth of 247 feet.

The building of this wall was a herculean task. Shafts were sunk down the cut was walled up on all sides with cement.

The fire was only 400 feet away when the work started. The engineers recognized that this was too close for safety, but they had no choice, for if the wall had been built any farther away it would not have cut off the main body of the coal basin and hence would have been useless as a barrier.

Therefore all the risks had to be borne. As soon as the first shafts were sunk they created a draft that carried the fire literally roaring toward the barrier line.

Fire Fighters Overcome.

The ground was so shattered that it seemed almost like cutting through quicksand. The rocks through which the men had to cut became so hot that a miner could not touch them with his bare hands. An insidious gas came through the cracks in the rock, and it filled all the shafts. Lights would not burn in it, and men who were subjected to its fumes quickly collapsed.

When this fire damp first began its work it created panic, and volunteers could not be induced to go down into the shafts. Undefeated, President Lathrop immediately installed powerful ventilating machinery, and a field hospital on the ground was equipped with the most powerful restoratives.

Thirty minutes at a time was all that a man could stand in the shaft, and so every half hour the force at work had to be changed, and even with this precaution there were frequent cases of prostration. But so well did the hospital force work that not a single death occurred in the midst of the entire operation.

The work of excavation is practically completed. The line of shafts and the open cut have been filled up with fireproof material. The alternating shafts have been sunk and filled up. There is a fireproof wall 700 feet long, 12 feet thick, running from the top of the hill where the coal outcrops to the last shaft, which at a depth of 175 feet reaches the permanent water level. From this shaft to the boundary of the coal seam, 247 feet below the surface, a tunnel is being driven. This will cut the lower coal seam in two, leaving not a scrap of combustible material.

When the tunnel is cut through it will be walled up with cement and filled with mud. This will make the fire wall 1,050 feet over its total length, 700 of which goes to the surface of the ground and is in some places 175 feet from its top base under ground.

The cost of the work is estimated at $250,000, but if it does its work, and there are no misgivings on this point, it will save a four hundred million ton coal filled field and extinguish a fire that has burned for fifty years in the recesses of the earth.

CARRIED FAMOUS MESSAGE.

Rowan, Who Brought Word From Garcia, to Leave Army.

Major Andrew S. Rowan is to retire from the army on his own application on Dec. 1 next. Major Rowan is known popularly all over the land by reason of his feat in the spring of 1898 of penetrating Cuba to the fastnesses of General Calixto Garcia for the purpose of giving to General Garcia a message from this government and of ascertaining whether the Cuban army could cooperate with the army of the United States. Rowan also got from the Cubans points as to the available landing places for the American forces and arranged for a meeting later. His mission was perilous, the more so because news that he had been dispatched upon it somehow came to be published soon after he had started, and the Spaniards were on the alert to intercept him.

After visiting Garcia, Rowan made his way with a trusty aid furnished to him by General Garcia to the north coast of Cuba, whence they sailed in an open boat to New Providence. There they got to a small schooner bound for Key West. When news of Rowan's safe arrival home was published there were great enthusiasm and admiration for him all over the country and the late George H. Daniels fanned the public flames by scattering over the land the "Message to Garcia," written by Elbert Hubbard.

State Experimental Station.

The passage of a law in the state of North Dakota establishing a good roads experimental station is a movement in the right direction. The experimental roads are not to be great in extent, one reaching from the capitol building at Bismarck to Fort Lincoln and the other from the state penitentiary to the Missouri river, but they are long enough and in such lently close proximity to the capital to be object lessons to the members of the next legislature. North Dakota's entrance into the list of state aid states may be confidently looked for two years hence.

A good joke on an editor, who went one evening to report a party at a home recently blessed with a new baby. He met his hostess at the door and after the usual salutations he asked after the baby's health. The lady who was quite deaf and suffering from the grippe thought he was asking after her cold and answered that although she usually had one every winter, this was the worst one she ever had; it kept her awake at night a good deal and at first confined her to bed. Then noticing that the newspaper man was getting nervous she said she could tell by his looks that he was going to have one just like hers and asked him to go in and sit down.

Sam Bond, engineer for the Pellston Light & Power Co. at Pellston, met with an accident last week which might have been much more serious. He was walking near the big engine with his oil can in his hand when his ankle turned and he fell, his head striking the engine and making a bad gash, rendering him unconscious for a time. In his fall he struck just a few inches from the engine crank, which would no doubt have crushed his skull if it had hit him.

The Antrim Iron Co. has the largest stock of pig iron in its yards that it has ever had at any one time in the history of the furnace. The quantity is estimated by good authority at 23,000 tons and it is being added to at the rate of 100 tons every 24 hours.

George Sanford, clerk at the Bellaire House, took a tablet for a severe headache last Thursday and went to his room to lie down. His wife went to call him a short time afterwards and became alarmed at his condition and summoned a doctor. The doctor said that if George had gone to his room and laid down as he first intended to without notifying anyone of his condition that the corner would undoubtedly have had a job the next morning.

While workmen were digging for the foundation for the new garage at the corner of State and Cass streets in Traverse City last week, they unearthed the remains of a human skeleton about two feet beneath the surface. All that could be taken out was the skull and one section of the vertebrae, the other bones being so far gone that they crumbled when exposed to the air. From the appearance of the soil around the bones it is probable that the body was buried in lime or ashes and has probably been in the ground for a great many years. The bones of the skull seperated when taken out of the ground but were wired together and are now on exhibition at police headquarters. No one has as yet determined how the skeleton came to be buried where found or whether it is the remains of an Indian or a white man.

Harry Shubrick, 21 years old, was found dead in the woods near his home at Cedar, last week having been accidently killed by his own gun.

The young man went hunting in the morning and not returning that night, his wife became alarmed and aroused the neighborhood. A searching party discovered his lifeless remains lying on a log. It is thought that in attempting to climb over the log, his gun caught and was discharged, the load striking him in the body and causing instant death.

NEEDFUL KNOWLEDGE

Charlevoix People Should Learn to Detect the Approach of Kidney Disease

The symptoms of kidney trouble are so unmistakeable that they leave no ground for doubt. Sick kidneys excrete a thick, cloudy, offensive urine, full of sediment, irregular of passage or attended by a sensation of scalding. The back aches constantly, headaches and dizzy spells may occur and the victim is often weighed down by a feeling of languor and fatigue. Neglect these warnings and there is danger of dropsy, Bright's Disease, or diabetes. Any one of these symptoms is warning enough to begin treating the kidneys at once. Delay often proves fatal.

You can use no better remedy than Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's Charlevoix proof:

W. George Linn, P. O. Box H, Charlevoix, Mich., says: "We have used Doan's Kidney Pills in our family for the past five years and have found that they are very effective in relieving troubles arising from disordered kidneys. We have yet to learn a case in which Doan's Kidney Pills have failed to live up to the claims made for them."

When the Dog Was Dressed.

"Oh, mamma," said little Jacky, running into the house, "our dog Tige is dressed awful funny!"

Mamma looked out of the window. "Why, there is Tige," she replied, "and he's not dressed at all. How could a dog be dressed?"

Jack's eyes sparkled. "I wanted you to ask me that," he told her, "because I wanted to tell you that a dog is dressed after he's been running—when he wears a collar and pants."

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

The sharp rattle of firearms in the distance brought a sudden stop to his lugubrious reflections. Five, a dozen, a score of shots were heard. The blood turned cold in the veins of every one in the garden; faces blanched suddenly, and all voices were hushed. A form of paralysis seized and held them for a full minute.

Then the voice of Brill below broke harshly upon the tense, still air: "Good God! Look! It is the bungalow!"

A bright glow lighted the dark mountain side; a vivid red painted the trees; the smell of burning wood came down with the breeze. Two or three sporadic shots were borne to the ears of those who looked toward the blazing bungalow.

"They've killed Chase!" burst from the stiff lips of Bobby Browne.

CHAPTER XVII.

CHASE COMES FROM THE CLOUDS.

For many minutes the watchers in the chateau stared at the burning bungalow, fascinated, petrified. Through the mind of each man ran the sudden, sharp dread that Chase had met death at the hands of his enemies.

Genevra felt her heart turn cold. Then something seemed to clutch her by the throat and choke the breath out of her body. Through her brain went whirling the recollection of his last words to her that afternoon, "They'll find me ready if they come for trouble." She wondered if he had been ready for them or if they had surprised him! She had heard the shots. Chase could not have fired them all. Was he now lying dead in that blazing— She screamed aloud with the thought of it!

"Can't something be done?" she cried again and again, without taking her gaze from the doomed bungalow. She turned fiercely upon Bobby Browne, his countryman. Afterward she recalled that he stood staring as she had stared. Lady Depplugham clasping his arm with both of her hands. The glance also took in the face of Depplugham. He was looking at his wife, and the eyes were wide and glassy, but not with terror. "It may not be too late!" again cried the princess. "There are enough of us here to make an effort, no matter how futile. He may be alive and trapped up"—

"You're right!" shouted Browne. "He's not the kind to go down with the first rush. We must go to him. We can get there in ten minutes. Brill! Where are the guns? Are you with us, Depplugham?"

He did not wait for an answer, but dashed out of the garden and down the steps, calling to his wife to follow.

"Stop!" shouted Depplugham. "We dare not leave this place! If they have turned against Chase, they are also ready for us. I'm not a coward, Browne. We're needed here, that's all. It's too late to help Chase. They've got him, poor devil! Everybody inside! Get to the guns if possible and cut off the servants' quarters. We must not let them surprise us. Follow me!"

There was wisdom in what he said, and Browne was not slow to see it clearly. With a single penetrating glance at General's despairing face, he shook his head gloomily and turned to follow Depplugham, who was hurrying off through the corridor with her ladyship.

"Come!" he called, and the princess, freeing Denslit's hand grasping her arm, gave one helpless look at the fire and he bent to obey.

In the grand hallway they came upon Britt and Saunders, white faced and excited. The white servants were clattering down the stairways, filled with alarm, but there was not one of the native attendants in sight. This was ominous enough in itself. The sound of a violent struggle in the lower corridor came to their ears. Loud voices, blows, a single shot, the rushing of feet, the panting of men in fierce combat—and then, even as the whites turned to retreat up the stairway, a crowd of men surged up the stairs from below, headed by Baillo, the major domo.

"Stop, excellencies!" he shouted again and again. Bobby Browne and Depplugham were covering the retreat, prepared to fight to the end for their women although unarmed. It was the American who first realized that Baillo was not heading an attack upon them. Baillo and a score of his men had refused to join the stablemen and gardeners in the plot to assassinate the white people. As a last resort the conspirators contrived to steal into the chateau, hoping to fall upon their victims before Baillo could interpose. The major domo, however, with the wily sagacity of his race, anticipated the move. The two forces met in the south hall after the plotters had effected an entrance from the garden. The struggle was brief, for the conspirators were outnumbered and surprised. They were even now lying below, bound and helpless, awaiting the disposition of their interested victims.

"It is not because we love you, excellencies," explained Baillo, with a sudden fierce look in his eyes, "but because Allah has willed that we should serve you faithfully. We are your dogs. Therefore we fight for you. It is a vile dog which bites its master."

Browne, with the readiness of the average American, again assumed command of the situation. He gave instructions that the prisoners, seven in number, be confined in the dungeon, temporarily at least.

"There will be no other attack on us tonight," said Browne, rejoining the women after his interview with Baillo. "It has missed fire for the present, but they will try to get at us sooner or later from the outside. Brill, will you and Mr. Saunders put those prisoners through the sweat box? You may be able to bluff something out of them if you threaten them with death. They"—

"It won't do, Browne," said Depplugham, shaking his head. "They are fatalists; they are stoics. I know the breed better than you. Question if you like, but threats will be of no avail. Keep 'em locked up; that's all."

Firearms and ammunition were taken from the armoury to the quarters occupied by the white people. Every preparation was made for a defense in the event of an attack from the outside or inside. The white servants were moved into rooms adjoining their employers. Britt and Saunders transferred their belongings to certain gorgeous apartments. Miss Pelham went into a Marie Antoinette suit close by that of the princess. The native servants retained their customary quarters below stairs.

Far in the night Genevra, sleepless and depressed, stole into the hanging garden. Her mind was full of the horrid thing that had happened to Hollingsworth Chase. He had been nothing to her. He could not have been anything to her had he escaped the guns of the assassins. And yet her heart was stunned by the stroke that it had sustained. Wide eyed and sick, she made her way to the railing and, clinging to the vines, stared for she knew not how long at the dull red glow on the mountain.

The night was still and ominously dark. She had never known a night since she came to Ispat when the birds and insects were so mute. A somber, supernatural calm hung over the island like a pall. The smell of smoke hung about her. She could not help wondering if his fine, strong body was lying up there burned to a crisp. It was far past midnight. She was alone in the garden. Sixty feet below her was the ground; above, the black dome of heaven.

She was not to know till long afterward that one of her faithful Thorberg men stood guard in the passage leading up from the garden, armed and willing to die. One or the other slept in front of her door through all those nights on the island.

Something hot trickled down her cheeks from the wide, pitying eyes that stared so hard. She was wondering now if he had a mother, sisters. How their hearts would be wrenched by this! She was thinking of him with pity and horror in her heart, not love.

A question was beginning to form itself vaguely in her troubled mind. Were all of them to die as Chase had died?

Suddenly there came to her ears the sound of something swishing through the air. An instant later a solid object fell almost at her feet. She started back with a cry of alarm. A broad shaft of light crossed the garden, thrown by the lamps in the upper hall of the chateau. Her eyes fell upon a wriggling, snakelike thing that lay in this path of light.

Fascinated, almost paralyzed, she watched it for a full minute before realizing that it was the end of a thick rope which lost itself in the heavy shadows at the cliff end of the garden. She was standing directly in the shaft of light. For some reason, the wriggling ceased. The next moment a faint, subdued shout was borne to her ears. Her flight was checked by that shout, for her startled, bewildered ears caught the sound of her own name.

At first, far above, she saw the glimmer of a light. It was too far off to be a star, and it moved back and forth.

Finally it dawned upon her that it was at the top of the cliff which overhung the garden and stretched away to the sea. Some one was up there waving a lantern. She was thinking hard and fast, a light breaking upon her understanding. Something like joy shot into her being. Who else could it be if not Chase? He alone would call out her name. He was alive!

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Trinket Worm.

Among the novelties in nature is a small worm, called the trinket worm, characterized by this peculiarity, which gives rise to its name:

On the leaves of a wild vine, called the trinket vine, is found a small worm, which looks at first like a small piece of white thread and is almost motionless. If the leaf be taken off and placed under a glass case in the room this little thread will in the short space of twenty-four hours grow into a good sized caterpillar, beautifully colored and studded with golden spots. When matured it will climb up the glass, fasten one of its extremities to the glass roof, and, leaving the other hanging in the air, will curl itself into a variety of forms, presenting exquisite patterns for gold trinkets, such as earrings, brooches and clasps, changing from time to time in great variety, whence its name is derived.

The Point of View.

"If you struck a man in the eye with a golf ball what would you do?" asked a man who was interested in first aid.

"Oh, I'd have to pray it from just where I found it," replied the enthusiastic golfer.

SPEEDY ENDS IN DEMAND NOW

Shifty, Heady Gridiron Men Shine Offensively and Defensively.

PASS CALLS FOR CHANGE.

This and the Developed Onside Kick Forces In Selection of Material. Tackles Will Be Little More Than Ends, Say Authorities.

Fast ends of the shifty, nervy, heady type are in demand by football coaches under the new style of the open gridiron game. With a good punter who can also toss the ball well for forward passing and two speedy end rushes any football team is a dangerous factor. The line, of course, must be solid enough to hold the charging enemy from breaking through before the ball can be handled for the play contemplated, but the old days of a beefy line, with big, heavy, smashing ends and great power in the back field, is slowly being superseded by the players of less weight and greater agility with feet and hands.

WOOD, CORNELL'S CLEVER QUARTERBACK.

[Wood, Cornell's regular quarterback, who has been laid up for several weeks, is in harness again now.]

Two plays, the forward pass and the onside kick, have necessitated this general change in the type of men called for by the coaches. Of course if men with weight possess speed, too, they are the most valuable, but players of this type are scarce. The rule calls for the lighter, faster man.

The need for ends possessing speed has been emphasized already this season in several games in the east and west. Coaches have been teaching a diversity of dashing plays around the flanks of the enemy, thus bringing the brunt of the work, both defensive and offensive, on those end rushes.

It is essential that the ends be fast and trifle if either the onside kick or the forward pass is to prove effective. The chief defense against both these plays has been to spread the men about the field as much as possible to intercept the ball or interfere with the runner chosen to catch it.

Here is where the true value of the end is demonstrated. If he is a shifty, fleet chap, ever watchful, he can outwit his opponent and get well down the field with the start of the play, thus giving an opportunity for the runner with the ball to either hurt it or kick it to him. But if he permits himself to be boxed or is unable to dodge an opponent while going at full speed the play may come to grief.

According to some students of the game, the present style of play means that in time the tackles will be little more than ends, that they will be used to the old time work of smashing interference and driving plays back into the line, as formerly was the chief occupation of the end rush. Their use of the tackles, it is figured, would give the ends greater freedom in roam about the field for these two great ground gaining plays, the forward pass and the onside kick.

Except in cases where one team outclasses the other it has been pretty definitely shown to the satisfaction of coaches and students of the game that there can be little real progress on the field through the enemy's line.

The COURIER wants wood on subscription.

A Good Roads Movement.

We've had a good roads movement down to Pohick, on the crick.
We raised some ready cash fur what we couldn't get on tick,
An', bein' a partic'lar job, we thought it would be wise
To get some men of probity to come an' supervise.
An' as a further guarantee 'gainst chances of neglect
We took another set of men an' told 'em to inspect.
An' these arrangements didn't seem jes' what they ought to be Till we'd secured some talent competent to oversee.

There arose misunderstandin's 'bout emoluments and rank,
But the payroll cherks kep' comin' very regular to the bank.
Somehow the highways didn't seem to lose their ruts an' lumps,
An' every time we went to town we had to bump the bumps.
We found it hard to comprehend what such delay could mean
In work so well inspected, supervised an' overseen.
The only manual labor on this job that seemed so slow
Was done with great reluctance by a small boy with a hoe.

The situation naturally shocked our civic pride,
We called some meetin's, an' the proper people testified.
We got the overseers to tell exactly what they knew
An' heard from the inspectors an' the supervisors too.
Then we drew up resolutions an' delivered an address
To vindicate our efforts to uplift an' to progress.
We have solved the difficulty, an' our hearts are full of joy
At seein' discipline maintained. We fired that no 'count boy.

DIED AFTER OPERATION

Death Came to Mrs. Drehmer Friday, at Mercy Hospital, Cadillac.

Following a severe operation, Mrs. William H. Drehmer of Charlevoix, died on Friday last at Mercy Hospital, Cadillac.

Mrs. Drehmer, who was Miss Mabel C. Kopf, daughter of John Kopf, near Susan Lake, was a most estimable young woman, very popular in this community and well-known for her excellent management of the domestic arrangements at the Chicago Club, of which she had been in charge during the summer season for several years.

Mrs. Drehmer's remains were taken Saturday from Cadillac to the residence of her sister, Mrs. Washburn, Petoskey, and were brought to Charlevoix Monday for burial. Services were held at the home of James Gaskin, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating. Burial was in Brookside cemetery.

The floral offerings were very beautiful and came from many relatives and friends, among them the management of the Chicago Club, Mr. and Mrs. Noble of Hotel Elston, Mr. Nathan Follett of Pittsburg.

Mrs. Drehmer's surviving relatives are her husband, father and the following brothers and sisters: George Kopf, Battle Creek; John Kopf, Jr., Boyne City; Mrs. J. A. Washburn, Petoskey; Mrs. James Moran, Traverse City; Mrs. George Frownfelder, Greenville; Mrs. Andrew Struthers, Hayes and Miss Anna Kopf, Chicago.

MORE FARMERS THE LESS TAXES

The per cent of land in farms and the average tax rates for the counties making up Western Michigan are:

County	Per cent of Land in Farms.	Average Tax Rate 1907.
Antrim	33.8	$27.82
Benzie	34.2	28.03
Charlevoix	38.7	28.69
Emmet	34.3	20.73
Grand Traverse	46.8	22.24
Kalkaska	15.5	26.71
Kent	88.9	15.04
Lake	16.4	30.81
Leelanau	62.8	24.72
Manistee	31.1	26.22
Mason	49.6	22.78
Mecosta	68.9	28.75
Missankee	27.9	38.01
Muskegon	52.3	21.20
Newaygo	51.6	23.84
Oceana	59.7	24.78
Osceola	50.9	30.83
Ottawa	88.9	14.59
Wexford	28.9	26.93

A most casual inspection of the above figures makes it clear that the development of the agricultural resources of a county means low tax rates.

What better inducement is there for the continuation of the "A Farmer for every Forty," campaign than the promise of less taxes? The settlement of Western Michigan by men who will cultivate the soil and extract from it the wealth there stored up means the bettering of the lot of us all.

Airship With Rowing Attachment.

An airship covered with waterproof canvas and fitted with propellers at its bow and stern, which will work like oars in water, is being built by an airship company in Cleveland, O. These strange appliances have been added in order to prevent it from sinking in case it should fall into water. The builder, Carl Bostel, says he expects to be able to carry from six to twenty passengers in the airship and will provide a compartment for baggage.

Description of the Great Apple Show—Western Michigan Apples are Far Superior

Bull Run, Ore., Nov. 5, 1909.

EDITOR COURIER,
Charlevoix, Mich.

I have just returned from the great Hood River Apple show. There were 1000 boxes on the stands, forty pounds in a box. The apples were all selected, every apple perfect and polished until you could see your face reflected on the surface, and I believe slightly colored. Not only were the apples perfect, but the boxes and surroundings also. They had two apples of monstrous size, one a Wolf River and the other a 20 ounce that weighed thirty-eight ounces each, perfect in appearance and they only asked fifty cents each for them. I asked the man who raised them if fifty cents would pay him for his trouble. He said no, for ten times fifty cents.

They had an apple show in Albany, one at Wenatchim, one at Rouge River. The best fruit from each of these places and the pick of what were shown at Seattle (100 boxes) are to be sent to Chicago to try and boom Oregon and Washington. So you see what the Grand Traverse region has to meet there. It will be the largest of its kind ever held in the world. They call this the best fruit country in the world and you do not see a good apple on the fruit stands here. The small poor fruit sells two for a nickel. I was going along Front street, Portland and I saw a box of Winter Banana apples and they were marked two for a quarter. I did not buy any.

I did not get you your grizzly bear, yet I have been enquiring around to see where the best place is to get one; I talked with a man who, twenty-five or thirty years ago was a great hunter, and he said that he saw one in the foot hills near Mount Hood twenty years ago. He said he just looked at it once before he started to run. I asked him how large it was; he said he did not have time to measure it, but it looked to be about ten feet high and twenty-five feet long, its mouth was large enough to take a calf at a bite. He advised me not to go after it, but if I did he would bet on the bear. I guess you do not want that kind of an animal.

It is raining here every day and as this is a clay soil there is mud every where except in the woods. This country has been described so often that there is not much that is new to tell, but if you want to know how it looks to me I will jot it down and send it to you though I fear it will not be very interesting. I am trying to find out why it is that there is so much difference in the price of apples raised here and there. Apples raised in Wenatchim, Washington, on land that sells from $7.00 to $10.00 per acre in a wild state, sell in New York for more per box, than a barrel of Michigan apples will fetch. Hood River, Oregon, Rouge River, Umpqua Valley and many other places have sold their apples on the tree, the purchaser paying all expenses, for $2.50 per box of about forty pounds. So you can figure what they will cost in New York or London, England, where most of the fruit is shipped. One consignment of Comas pears sold in London for $10.80 per box and netted the grower four and one-half cents for every pear on his trees and the expense to him was nothing.

Now in conclusion would say that apples raised in Charlevoix county have a better flavor. They are just as large and well colored and keep as well as any that are raised here, so there is a reason for the difference in price outside of quality. I have seen only one COURIER since I came out here. I would like to know if there is anybody alive there now. Do the county officers come to long enough to draw their salaries. I think times are pretty lively about that time.

I see that potatoes are very low in price. They are worth, here, $1.00 per 100 pounds. Meat is retailing in Portland, for, round, sirloin porterhouse, all one price, ten cents per pound, roasts eight to twelve cents; briskets, flank, three to five cents; pork eight to fourteen cents; lamb fore quarter ten cents, hind quarter twelve cents; veal eight to twelve cents; chicken fifteen to twenty cents. Eggs thirty cents per dozen; butter sixty to eighty cents for two pound bricks. Common labor $2.25 per day; teamsters $2.75. Plenty of men. Board $5.50 per week; rooms fifty to one dollar per night, less if taken by the week. I guess that is enough.

Good-bye, yours,
A. R. Struthers,
Hull Run, Oregon.
Care of Johnson Lumber Co.

P. S.—I expect to be home in the spring if not before.

ARRESTED IN DETROIT

Charged with Stealing from Telephone Pay Stations.

Man Alleged to be Charles E. Turrell Formerly of Charlevoix.

The Bellaire Independent of last week contained the following in regard to a former Charlevoix resident:

The Detective, a journal published for aiding in the identification of criminals, this month publishes a picture and gives an account of the act for which Charles Turrell, alias Watkins, alias Slocum was arrested in Detroit last month. The picture presents a good likeness of a former Bellaire resident, Charles E. Turrell, which was quickly identified by Sheriff Kittle, and he at once notified the Detroit police department of the prisoner's name.

It seems that in some manner the person secured a duplicate key to the telephone pay station and whenever an opportunity presented itself would unlock the boxes and appropriate the cash contained therein. The telephone company has been robbed systematically for some months and had detectives put on the case with the result that a person answering to the name of Charles E. Turrell was caught in the act with his pockets filled with nickels, dimes and quarters.

Reports have come to Bellaire the past several months that Mr. Turrell was in Detroit and that he had a very lucrative position and was doing the best in a financial way that he had ever done. When seen in Detroit a few weeks ago by a Bellaire ite he was in the company of Jack Johnson, the colored prize fighter, and was out riding with him in his (Johnson's) automobile, and to all appearances Charley had all kinds of money, which he was spending very freely.

Charley Turrell left Bellaire several years ago, first going south and later back to Charlevoix, where he accepted a position as cashier in a bank, where he worked until about two years ago, when he became mixed up in a scandal there and left for Detroit. He was never heard from again until last summer, when Sheriff Kittle received word to keep watch for him, as he had stolen an automobile. Later the automobile was found by the police, badly damaged, and nothing further of this escapade was heard, and we hope the person arrested in Detroit may prove to be some other than the one above mentioned.

Thanksgiving Proclamation

To the People of the State of Michigan:

In obedience to the long established custom providing for the setting apart of a day for the purpose of expressing our gratitude unto a beneficent Creator for favors bestowed upon us, I hereby designate Thursday, November 25, as a day of Thanksgiving.

The people of Michigan live in a state favored of God, and the duty of taking account of our blessings and mercies and rendering thanksgiving and praise to the giver thereof should be observed by every citizen. Our fertile farms and bountiful crops, our factories bringing wealth to our state from every country, our treasure-stored mines—all these have contributed to our marvelous material growth and advancement.

With all our different creeds and beliefs there are none among us, let us hope, who deny God's great share and help in the bringing about of our happiness and prosperity.

The poor and the unfortunate should be remembered and their hearts made glad by deeds of kindness. The wards of the state and the counties should have a share in the festivities of the day, and a day of good cheer and happiness should be granted those whose liberty is restrained for our protection.

Let us upon this day assemble in our houses of worship and with faith renewed and strengthened, thank our father's God and ours for what he has done for us during the year that has gone.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the Great Seal of the State at Lansing, this fifteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and nine.

By the Governor
Fred M. Warner, Governor.
Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

NOTHING TO NOTHING

Result of Saturday's Game With East Jordan.

Boys Will Meet Traverse City on Home Ground November 20

East Jordan failed in their expectations of adding to their record a victory over Charlevoix, neither side being able to score in Saturday's game.

The East Jordan team outweighed the local boys, but could not carry the ball over the goal line.

The first half began by East Jordan kicking off to Charlevoix, the ball being carried back a short distance. The extra weight of East Jordan's line and their strong defensive work prevented any gains from through the line. Charlevoix lost the ball on downs, Carey punting on the third down to the fifty yard line. East Jordan carried the ball in several scrimmages nearly to the goal, when the local boys showed the stuff of which they were made by holding for downs, but being unable to gain the necessary ten yards were forced to punt. The unsuccessful punts were luckily recovered by the locals, giving them a first down. Carey was again forced to punt and succeeded in getting the ball to the middle of the field where it was kept until the end of the first half.

The fact that the ball was kept in Charlevoix's territory during most of the first half put the boys on their metal and they determined that during the second half things would happen. On account of an injury to his shoulder, Durgan, was obliged to leave the game early in the second half, very much crippling the team both in defensive and offensive work.

Of the local boys, Carey did good work with his boot, several times saving the team from the touch down which would mean defeat; Wallace showed much improvement in running back punts; Papineau played a good game at end, never letting his man get around him and was able to spoil one or two forward passes.

The second team won from East Jordan's second team by a score of 42 to 0.

The Charlevoix boys play Traverse City on the home grounds Saturday November 20. They are working hard and will not be easily defeated. The boys feel that with the proper support they can win from Traverse City, giving them a very good title to the championship of northern Michigan. This the last game of the season. The word for the week is, "Come Out Charlevoix, Come Out."

Our boys have upheld their reputation this season and if they win this game, will be champions. It is hoped that our business places will close that forenoon and everybody be on hand to root for Charlevoix.

HE FOUGHT WITH SCOTT

Captain Beattie of This City Talks to High School

One of the Few Surviving Veterans of Mexican War.

Monday morning, Captain Beattie of this city, one of the few Mexican war veterans yet alive gave the pupils of the high school a rare treat by giving them an account of his experiences in the Mexican war.

Captain Beattie has a graphic way of relating the story of how 14,000 men in a foreign country, overcame an army out numbering them by far and took possession of their capitol city planting the American flag in the halls of the Montezumas. After relating his story the captain sang the story of this great achievment of american arms, in a song composed at the time, by a member of his regiment.

The visits of Mr. Scott and Major Green a short time ago and of Captain Beattie this week, are events which our schools will not be able to enjoy much longer and cannot help but be an inspiration to the boys and girls who were present.

WHAT THE KIDNEYS DO

Their Unceasing Work Keeps Us Strong and Healthy

All the blood in the body passes through the kidneys once every three minutes. The kidneys filter the blood. They work day and night. When healthy they remove about 500 grains of impure matter daily, when unhealthy some part of this impure matter is left in the blood. This brings on many diseases and symptoms pain in the back, backache, nervousness, hot dry skin, rheumatism, gout, gravel disorder of the eyesight and hearing, dizziness, irregular heart, debility, drowsiness, dropsy, deposits in the urine, etc. But if you keep the kidneys right you will have no trouble with your kidneys.

Mrs. John Chamberlin, Forest St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills an excellent preparation for kidney disorders, in fact, I found them far superior to any other kidney remedy I ever used. My back ached severly and I had pains in my loins, coupled with other symptoms of disordered kidneys. When Doan's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice, I obtained a box and their use brought me prompt relief from the aches and pains. I recommend Doan's Kidney Pills at every opportunity."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Retired Capitalist's Mission.

Colonel Nicholas Bell, a retired capitalist and politician of St. Louis, passed through Montgomery, Mo., recently in a motorcar on the way to Seattle, Wash. He is going over the same route he traveled with an ox team forty-three years ago. He was then sixteen years old, the same age as his son Christian, who is driving the motor. Colonel Bell is telling farmers along the way of two things that will make them rich and happy—rock roads and motorcars.

How to Keep Rugs Flat.

Girls who have a habit of shuffling their feet, thereby incurring frequent scoldings for kicking up rugs, will find life pleasanter if they cut triangles of medium weight cardboard and sew them on the under side of rugs at each corner.

HOW FOOTBALL TEAMS SIZE UP

Recent Games Give Good Line on Strength of Big Elevens.

YALE APPEARS STRONGEST

Elis Showing to Date Proves Wearers of Blue Are Again In Line For Championship—Situation at Penn. Cornell Shows Improvement.

The crucial football games of 1909 are at hand and from now until the latter part of November all the big gridiron contests will be divided. The majority of struggles played by the big universities for the past month or more have been only what would be termed by the baseball scribe spring practice games. The recent contests have given us a fair line on the respective strength of the big elevens.

Of the eastern teams Yale's showing is the most creditable, and it looks as if the New Haven seat of learning is represented this year by a team that is sure to bring much glory to its alma mater before the season ends.

The work of the Blue teams back field, Captain Coy, Philbin, Daly and Howe, is the best seen in New Haven in many years. Captain Coy, who has been occupying his old place at fullback, has been kicking goals from the field at difficult angles.

Philbin has been playing a most sensational game since the season opened. His playing has stood out as a prominent feature of many of Eli's games. Daly at halfback has added much strength to the back field. Johnson's work at quarter has been most pleasing to the coaches, and he will no doubt be the regular quarter from now on. He runs his team well and shows good judgment at all times.

Logan, Smythe and Brooks at the ends have all been playing good football.

The Yale line has played good ball. They charge hard and fast and help the man put the ball in good fashion. The offense of the whole Blue team is of the fighting variety, and their defense, especially that of the lines, is of the "stone wall" kind.

Next to Yale, Harvard's showing may be considered the best.

The work of the Cambridge team's end, which at best has been of an erratic sort, is the strong point of the Johnnies defense. The line, which was thought by many to be the Crimson team's strong point, has given away time and again.

Harvard will have to strengthen her line very much if she expects to stop the "Hobbsike" hitting of the heavy Yale backs. This is the Cambridge team's weak spot, and unless a great improvement is exhibited by them in the very near future a victory over Yale in their annual game is not to be expected. Another thing that the coaches up at the Cambridge college must overcome is the fumbling of punts by the backs.

The situation at Pennsylvania early this season was a most critical one. The coaches had to confront the proposition of developing a whole new back field with nothing but a team of raw material to draw from. They set about their work in the right way, with the result that today Penn has one of the fastest and best back fields in the country. Thayer, Heilman, Sommer, Lamsdell and Miller are all fast men, who start well with the ball and find their openings in good style. Thayer has developed into quite a kicker, and in the game against Penn State his punts were all for forty-five yards or better.

Cornell has shown marked improvement both in the individual work of the men and in their team play within the last two weeks. The Ithacans used a great deal of open play and have shown themselves to be a team that has a good knowledge of the new game and one that will be a dangerous opponent to all teams. The work of Hurlburt, Laventry, Crosby and MacArthur at the end positions is the best work exhibited by any men occupying the end positions on a Cornell team in quite some time.

should capture you alive. Ever think of that?"

"Good heavens! You—why, what a horrible thing to say!"

"You won't bring as much in the south sea market as you would in Rapp-Thorberg or Paris, but I dare say you could be sold for"—

"Please, Mr. Chase, don't suggest anything so atrocious," she cried, something like terror in her voice.

"Neenah's father sold her for a handful of gems," said he, with distinct meaning in his voice. She was silent, and he went on after a moment. "Is there so much difference, after all, where one is sold, just so long as the price is satisfactory to all concerned?"

"You are very unkind, Mr. Chase," she said with quiet dignity. "I do not deserve your sarcasm."

"I humbly plead for forgiveness," he said, suddenly contrite. "It was beastly."

"American wit, I imagine you call it," she said scornfully. "I don't care to talk with you any longer."

"Won't you forgive me? I'm a poor brute—don't lash me. In two or three weeks I'll step down and out of your life; that will be penalty enough, don't you think?"

"For whom?" she asked in a voice so low that he could scarcely hear the words. Then she laughed ironically. "I do forgive. It is all that a prince or a princess is ever asked to do. I'm beginning to believe. I also forgive you for coming into my life."

"If I had been a little more intelligent I should not have come into it at all," he said. She turned upon him quickly, stung by the remark.

"Is that the way you feel about it?" she asked sharply.

"You don't understand. A man of intelligence would never have kicked Prince Karl. As a matter of fact, in trying to kick Prince Karl out of your life I kicked myself into it. A very simple process, and yet scarcely intellectual. A jackass could have done as much."

"A jackass may kick at a king," she paraphrased casually. "A cat may only look at him. But let us go back to realities. Do you mean to tell me that they—these wretches—would dare to sell me—us, I mean—into the kind of slavery you mention?"

"Why not?" he asked soberly, arising and coming quite close to her side. "You are beautiful. If they should take you alive it would be a very simple matter for any one of these men to purchase you from the others. You might easily be kept on this island for the rest of your days and the world would be none the wiser, or you could be sold into Persia or Arabia or Turkey. I am not surprised that you shudder. Von Blitz and Ensula mean to destroy all of us. We are to disappear from the face of the earth. When our friends come to look for us we will have died from the plague and our bodies will have been burned, as they always are in Japat. There will be no one left to deny the story. After tomorrow no ship is due to put in here for three weeks. They will see to it that none of us get out to that ship, nor will the ship's officers know of our peril. The word will go forth that the plague has come to the island. That is the first step, your highness. But there is one obstacle they have overlooked," he concluded. She looked up inquiringly.

"My warships," he said, the whimsical smile broadening.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE PLAGUE IS ANNOUNCED.

THE next morning a steamship flying the English flag came to anchor off Aratan, delivered and received mail bags and after an hour's stay steamed away in the drift of the southeast trade winds—Bombay to Cape Colony. The men at the chateau gazed longingly, helplessly through their glasses at this black hulled visitor from the world they loved. They watched it until nothing was left to be seen except the faint cloud of smoke that went to a pin point in the horizon. There had been absolutely no opportunity to communicate with the officers of the ship. They sailed away hurriedly, as if in alarm. Their haste was significant.

"Perhaps Bowles succeeded in getting a word with the officer who came ashore," said Browne hopefully. "He knows the danger we are in."

"My dear Browne, Bowles hadn't the ghost of a chance to communicate with the ship," said Chase. "He can't bully 'em any longer with his Tommy Atkins coat. They've outgrown it, just as he has. It was splendid while it lasted, but they're no more afraid of it now than they are of my warships. I wish there was some way to get him and his English assistants into the chateau. It's awful to think of what is coming to them sooner or later."

"Is there no way to help them?" groaned Deppingham.

"I'll never forget poor Bowles the first time I saw him in his slinky red jacket and that hooligan cap of his," reflected Chase, as if he had not heard Deppingham's remark. "He put them on and tried to overawe the crowd that night when I was threatened in the market place. He did his best, poor chap, and I"—

"Look!" exclaimed Britt suddenly, pointing toward one of the big gates in the upper end of the park. "I believe they're making an attack!"

The next instant the men in the balcony were leaving it pellmell, picking up the ever ready rifles as they dashed off through the halls and out into the park. They kept themselves as well covered as possible by the boxed trees, although up to this time there had been no shooting.

Chase, in advance, suddenly gave vent to a loud cry and boldly dashed out into the open, disregarding all shelter. Two of the native park patrol were hastening toward the gate from another direction. Outside the huge, barred gate a throng of men and women were congregated. Some of the men were vigorously slashing away at the bars with sledges and crowbars; others were crouching with rifles leveled—in the other direction!

"It's Bowles!" shouted Chase eagerly.

The situation at once became clear to those inside the walls. Bowles and his friends, a score all told, had managed to reach the upper gate and were now clamoring for admission, beset on all sides by the enemy's pickets.

"For God's sake, be quick!" shouted Bowles. "There's a thousand of them coming up the mines road!"

The gates were unlocked by the patrol, and the panic stricken throng tumbled through them and scattered like sheep behind the high, sheltering walls. Once more the massive gates were closed and the bolts thrown down just in time to avoid a fusillade of bullets from the outside.

Once inside the chateau the fugitives, shivering with terror, fairly collapsed. There were three Englishmen in the party besides Bowles, and Chase recognized the Persian wives of Jacob von Blitz among the women who had been obliged to cast their lot with the refugees from Ararat. The sister of Neenah and five or six other women who had been sold into the island made up the remainder of the little group of trembling females.

The remainder of the men in the party, fourteen or fifteen in all, were of many castes and nationalities and of various ages. There were brown skinned fellows from Calcutta, a couple of sturdy Greeks, an Egyptian and a Persian, three or four Assyrians and as many Maoris. As to their walks in life, among them were clerks and guards from the bank; members of the native constabulary, Indian fakers and showmen and venders of foreign gewgaws.

Bowles, his thin legs still shaking perceptibly, although he strove mightily to hold them at strict "attention," was the spokesman. A valiant heart thumped once more against the seams of the little red jacket. If his hand trembled and his voice shook it was because of the unwonted exertion to which both had been put in that stirring flight at dawn.

"For some time we have been preparing for the outbreak," he said, fingering the glass of brandy that Britt had poured for him. "Ever since Chase began to go in so noticeably for the ladies—ahem!"

Chase glared at him. The others tittered.

"I don't mean the old story, sir, of the Persians, and, I'm saying, sir, what's more, there wasn't a word of truth in it—I mean the ladies of the chateau, begging pardon too. Von Blitz came to me often with complaints that you were being made a fool of by a pretty face or two and that you were going over to the enemy body and soul. When I heard that they tried to kill you the night before last I made up my mind that no white man was to be left to tell the tale. Last night we locked all the company's books in the vaults, got together all the bank notes and gold we had on hand and made preparations to go on board the steamer when she called this morning. My plan was to tell them of the trouble here and try to save you. We were all expected to die of the plague—that's what we were—and I realized that Tommy Atkins was off the boards forever.

"We hadn't any more than got the cash and valuables ready to smuggle aboard when down came Ensula upon us—10 o'clock last night, your lordship. He had a dozen men with him, and he told every mother's son of us that our presence in the town was not desired until after the ship had sailed away. We were taken up into the hills by a squad of men. There wasn't a man among us that didn't know that we were to be killed as soon as the ship had gone. With our own eyes we saw the mail bags rifled and nearly all of the mail destroyed. The pouches from the chateau were burned. Ensula politely informed us that the plague had broken out among the chateau servants and that no mail could be sent out from that place. He said he intended to warn the ship's officer of the danger in landing, and—well, that explains the short stay of the ship and the absence of nearly all mail from the island. There won't be another boat for three weeks, and they won't land because of the plague. They will get word, however, that every one in the chateau has died of the disease and that scores of natives are dying every day.

GOTCH TO TAKE ON RAICEVICH

Italian Champion and World's Greatest to Grapple Nov. 9.

CONTEST TO BE IN CHICAGO.

Both Men In Splendid Shape For Bout—Man From Italy Has Long List of Victories to His Credit—Won Tournament In Paris.

Spurred on by his friends and the wrestling public alike, Frank Gotch, the world's champion grappler, has decided to make a grand cleanup of the foreign mat artists now in this country, who have been parading around hurling challenges right and left since their arrival.

As a starter Gotch has agreed to take on Giovanni Raicevich, who came from Italy, labeled champion of that country, in an effort to take home with him the world's title.

All arrangements have been completed for the bout, and the contest will take place before the Empire A. C. of Chicago, Nov. 9. The terms of the articles regarding monetary conditions call for a cash division of 70 and 30 per cent of the receipts.

The scheduled battle has awakened interest in the wrestling game to a small degree, as it has been some time since the world's champion has been seen in actual competition. Interest is made more manifest since Raicevich is heralded as a "comer" in wrestling circles. The foreigner weighs 248 pounds and plans to enter the ring at about that weight. Gotch tips the scales in the neighborhood of 205 pounds. He is in very good condition now, as he has been working on his farm all summer, and it will require but little work to bring him up to tiptop shape.

The champion is doing his training stunts with an array of star men. Farmer Burns, who trained Gotch for the memorable contest with Hackenschmidt, the "Russian Lion," is one of

GIOVANNI RAICEVICH, WHO WILL TRY HIS SKILL AGAINST GOTCH

Gotch's foremost trainers. Mike Dwyer of the Illinois A. C. has also a hand in putting Hackenschmidt's conqueror into shape. Raicevich will have as his training partners Emilio Ruggerio and Emil Groggilo.

Raicevich won a big wrestling tournament in Paris last year, defeating all the star mat men on the continent with the exception of Zbysco, whom he never has encountered. Since his arrival in this country Raicevich has proved that he is a dangerous man for Gotch to tackle.

After this contest Gotch intends to take on Pat Rooney, the Irish champion, and later Zbysco, the Polish wonder.

Bad Golf Rule Abolished.

The rules committee of the Western Golf association at a meeting at the Chicago Golf club recently officially abolished section 4 of rule 32. "No putts shall be conceded." The committee in place of the prohibitive rule makes a recommendation that players do not concede putts to their opponents.

This action of the W. G. A. rules committee places the matter of conceding putts in complete accord with the U. S. G. A. rules and removes a source of friction between the two associations that threatened for a time last winter and again during the present tournament to result in the secession from the U. S. G. A. of many of the biggest clubs in the west that are members of both associations.

Automobile Topics.

As a result of the new tax on gasoline in Great Britain, benzol, a product of the coke ovens in gas works, is again being pushed as a substitute fuel for motors.

A blacklist of all chauffeurs found guilty of misdemeanors, particularly such as misappropriating the cars of their employers, has been established by the Automobile Club of Canada.

An easy way to locate a missing cylinder is to hold the head of a match against each cylinder in succession. Those in regular operation will ignite the match readily; the other will not.

Some of the more common causes for the overheating of gasoline motors are too little lift to exhaust valve, too small exhaust port, late spark, overfeed of gasoline and back pressure from silencer.

WEDDING IN RHYME.

How a Judge of Malbon, Miss., Ties Nuptial Knot.

Judge Norman Moore, the rhyming jurist, now mayor of Malbon, performed in verse the ceremony that made James Davis and Bettie Johnson man and wife. The exact words were:

Jim, will you take Bet
Without regret
To love and cherish
Until one of you perish
And is laid under sod,
So help you God?

The bridegroom replied in the affirmative. Then, turning to the bride, Judge Moore said:

Bet, will you take Jim
And cling to him
Both in and out,
Through thick and thin,
Holding him to your heart
Until death you do part?

The bride blushed with a modest bow of consent, and Judge Moore dismissed them as follows:

Through life's alternative joy and strife
I now pronounce you man and wife.
Go up life's rugged hill
Until you both reach the level,
And now salute your bride.
You big but trusty devil.

NEW BASEBALL PILOTS FOR 1910

Four Major League Clubs Have Selected Managers.

DUFFY TO LEAD CHICAGO.

Great Things Expected of New Handler of Hitless Wonders—McAleer Popular in Washington—O'Connor of St. Louis—Dahlen of Brooklyn.

Baseball still continues to occupy considerable space in the weekly chronicle of sports. Three new major league managers have been selected within the last few weeks, and it is a sure bet that three more will be named before the meeting of the magnates in December.

St. Louis American league fans are high in praise of Jack O'Connor, whom President Hedges has selected to succeed Jimmy McAleer as leader of the Browns in 1910. The new manager is young, energetic and a hard worker. He is one of the most intelligent trainers in baseball. If he works his men as he works himself they will be in the best of physical condition for 1910.

HUGH DUFFY, NEW MANAGER OF CHICAGO AMERICANS.

O'Connor knows baseball as well as any one, and he has the personal magnetism to attract and hold those around him. He is a hustler on the coaching line and believes in whooping things up while the game is on. He is not too afraid to cut loose, and there will be some plays put and looked for pinch off around Sportsman's park next summer, whether they fail or succeed. Jack has had considerable success in picking out youngsters from junior league clubs, and he takes a natural interest in coaching and developing young players. All of which is going to help him a lot. But, after all of this, his success will depend more upon the way he handles and controls his club than anything else, and this is the problem O'Connor has still to solve.

In selecting Hugh Duffy to manage the Chicago Americans President Charley Comiskey played a shrewd card. Duffy has spent a lifetime in baseball. For many years he was a wonderful ball player. His knowledge of the game is perfect. Keen to note the weakness in every ball player that comes across his vision, no player can hope to bluff his way through.

Duffy first entered the big league with Chicago in 1889. The following year he hopped over to the Brotherhood, and in 1891 Sir Hugh kept on being a renegade, being one of the few players who was in the American association.

In 1901 the new leader of the Hitless Wonders was the skipper of the Milwaukee team. Duffy had a poor team, and his showing as a manager wasn't any too good, he being out of a job when Milwaukee was dropped from the American league circuit in favor of St. Louis. Hughey won a pennant for Milwaukee in the Western league, but during the two years he had command of the Philadelphia National league team it didn't figure in the race.

Washington fans are beginning to figure that with Jim McAleer at the helm the Nationals will at last relinquish their hold on the cellar championship and climb up two or three rungs on the pennant ladder.

Although McAleer has been handling the St. Louis Browns for the last eight years and has never been able to land the Browns in first place, he is accounted one of the cleverest managers in the profession and never has been known to get the worst of any deal he made. In 1908 his team made a gallant fight for the flag.

McAleer will have complete control in Washington and will receive from the Senators the same salary he was paid in St. Louis—namely, $10,000 a year. He does not expect to win the pennant for Washington next season, but has hopes of putting the club in the first division. McAleer hails from Youngstown, O., and started playing ball with the team of that city in 1887. He became a National leaguer in 1889 and for many seasons was one of the country's greatest outfielders. His first managerial experience was in Cleveland in 1900, the year before the American league expanded.

Bill Dahlen, the former New Yorker and erstwhile Boston player, has been chosen to lead the Brooklyn Nationals next season. Whether Dahlen will prove an aggressive leader in the right way is a question which at this time can only be answered by a surmise.

BILLIARD MEN TO MEET.

Big Professional Tourney to Be Held In New York Nov. 22.

Billiards throughout the country, and particularly in the east, should receive a great impetus the coming winter if the plans that were formulated recently in New York bear fruit. A committee was appointed to form a permanent organization to promote the sport. The moot point was that the corporation which has controlled the manufacture of billiard appurtenances has had too much power in the conduct of tournaments as well as in the actions of the star players in appearing in matches.

It was decided that the room keepers should co-operate in having the champions appear in as many rooms as possible during a season and by acting on their own initiative have the master billiardists meet, no matter on what the make of table may be.

The first shot to be fired in the campaign against the billiard trust is to take the form of an open professional tournament to begin in the Madison Square Garden concert hall, New York, Nov. 22. For this the room keepers have started a subscription which it is expected will reach $10,000, including the gate. This will be the biggest sum that has ever been offered in competition with a similar event since the first one was held in 1854. Unlike former tournaments, the affair will be conducted by the new Room Keepers' association.

Cables have already been sent to France inviting Vignaux and Cure, and the following American masters are either pledged or expected to play: Sutton, Slosson, Cutler, Hoppe, Demarest and Maruingstar. The style of billiards will be 18.2 balk line, at which Maruingstar is now holder of the championship.

The new organization may not only control billiards, but pool, as many of the men present were in favor of holding tournaments in all branches for amateurs as well as professionals in order to promote interest in the sport. Frank Keeney of Brooklyn, who is rather well known in theatrical circles, outlined the prospects of booking players like actors for the various members of the association.

BASEBALL IN JAPAN.

Visit of Wisconsin Team Stirs Up Interest in Game Abroad.

The team of Wisconsin university baseball players which visited Japan recently has created an extremely favorable impression and increased interest in the game. The attendance throughout the series played upon the Keio university grounds averaged between 8,000 and 10,000 persons. Wisconsin and Keio were fairly evenly matched and the struggle was nip and tuck from start to finish.

So keen has the interest in baseball as played by Wisconsin been found to be that there is now talk of the organization of a national baseball league in Japan, the establishment of grounds at Tokyo, Osaka and other places and the playing of regularly scheduled matches, with an increase in the number of international games. The improvement of the game throughout Japan is remarkable.

FITZ TO FIGHT SQUIRES.

Veteran Pugilist to Take on Australian Heavyweight In Sydney.

Bob Fitzsimmons is on his way to Australia, where he intends to fight the much adored Bill Squires and Bill Lange, the Australian champion. If he beats the turlamed pugilistic lemon and Lange, Fitz may be induced to tackle Tommy Burns. The Cornishman needs the money and figures that Australia is a better place to get it than either England or America, where fight fans know only too well that he has seen his best days.

ONSIDE KICKS

Dean, the Army halfback, has developed into a drop kicker of ability. He has been kicking goals from all angles and is expected to break up more than one game before the conclusion of the season.

Cornell has been experimenting with light ends this fall, and they have not played very satisfactory football. The coaches are now looking for bigger end material to whip into shape for the game with Chicago Nov. 13.

Minnesota has a play in which the end takes the ball directly from center and then passes it to a halfback for a buck into the side of the line from which the end ran. The play worked successfully against Nebraska.

Princeton is sadly in need of ends. This has been the Tigers' weak point for several years, and it is the same this fall. Welch and Gill have the call at present, with Meigs and King the second choice. There is great room for improvement.

Last year Roper, then Princeton's head coach, and Eddie Dillon, captain of the Tigers in 1908, coached the Sewanee university team when the Princeton season closed. This brought Sewanee to the Tigers' schedule, which meant a 1,200 mile trip for the game on Osborne field.

Michigan is preparing for Penn in a different manner than in previous years. Yost this time prefers speed to brawn. His back field averages but 165 pounds. He has all one man on the eleven that weighs more than 200. "Hurry Up" is trying an entirely new method this year. He must win this year or be considered a back number.

CARE OF ROADS.

After Good Ones Are Constructed They Should Be Cared For Regularly.

The good road era has begun in many states, and already the steam roller, the piles of crushed rock along the roadside and the digging out of the original roadway are familiar sights in many of the eastern states. The roads built are generally of approved macadam construction, which, completed, are perfect strips of white ribbon running through the green fields and hills of the rural sections.

These roads are perfectly built, and as soon as completed the farmers and other ratepayers contentedly sit back and exclaim, "Those roads are now good for a generation or more without trouble." This is a serious error and one being made in many states. That it is an error is borne out by the dust cloud raised by a passing car traveling at twenty miles per hour or perhaps faster.

Many fail to realize that whenever dust is raised a road is being destroyed. This is particularly the case on smooth macadam surfaces, where there is nothing to hold the dust on the road and where every cross wind blows off any loose material.

As soon as roads are built arrangements should be made to keep them in repair. With roads it is essentially "a stitch in time saves nine." Some dust preventive should be used immediately macadam roads are completed in order to prevent dust.

Oil, tar and many special preparations are now on the market, and the communities should be educated to look upon these additions as a legitimate part of the road maintenance. California has its oiled roads over which motoring is a pleasure to the motorist and not a dust path to the citizen who happens to be on the road the same day or who has the misfortune to reside along a well traveled highway.

Massachusetts has proved that road treatments are a success and more economical than continuous applications of water, and in England dust preventing is always considered a part of the road problem.

The Word Bible.

The word Bible is derived from the Latin name Biblia, which was treated as a singular, although it comes from the Greek neuter plural meaning "little books." This Greek diminutive was derived from byblus, or papyrus, the famous material on which ancient books were written. The title "Bible" was first used about the middle of the second Christian century in the so called second epistle of Clement, xiv, 2.

Neighborhood Notes

The remarkable growth of the state of Michigan is indicated by figures obtainable in the auditor general's office. The first tax levy was spread in 1838 and aggregated $85,000.93. This year the levy was $3,920,710.71, about 40 times as much. Since the state was organized it has cost a total of $88,490,495.87 to maintain the state. The first raise of the levy was made in 1841 when it was raised to $103,000. It then went back and forth up and down the scale, and in 1860 was $202,000. In 1861 when the war came the levy was jumped to $464.10 and in 1865 it was more than half a million. From that time on it increased and in 1877 passed the million mark for the first time. Later it went below this, but since 1884 it has always been more than that. In 1895 it passed the three million mark, but later it dropped back to about $2,000,000. Since then it has been gradually on the increase.

Philip Parmalee, of Marion formerly employed in this city and well known here, has attained considerable success in electrical and automobile lines. Six years ago he was working in his father's mill in Winterfield township, near Marion. He became at once interested in electrical devices and problems. With constant reading and investigating and with a barrel of a 22-caliber rifle as his armature, he started in to make a motor. Then he made a larger motor and it was not long before he was as familiar with that device as a veteran. When he was fifteen years old he had built sixteen complete motors and some showed improvement over any in existence. The young man bought a full electrical equipment and installed it in his father's mill. The young man then made a complete gasoline engine, which in some respects was an improvement over any previously built. It was more compact to build and more powerful. Recently Parmalee sold his patterns, blue prints, etc., to a manufacturer for a good sum. For a time Parmalee worked in this city for the Cadillac machine company, where he did some of the most expert work in the shop. After working in some of the best motor and gasoline plants in the state he went to Flint, where he worked with the Buick people, where he developed into the best demonstrator in that mammoth plant.—Cadillac News.

A London dispatch says: The trespass department of the state land commission has unearthed two big timber steals in Alger county, and according to an announcement today, if sufficient evidence can be procured at least two prominent men of that county will be arrested. The theft of timber from land which at the time of the cutting, it was state land, aggregate nearly 250,000 feet of white pine, hemlock, birch and beach, mostly of the first named variety. The finding of the alleged steals is the result of nearly two years' work by Deputy commissioner W. C. Ford.

The first steal according to an officer of the commission, was made on six descriptions of land and consisted of 178,506 feet of timber. This was cut in 1901 and '05, it is alleged, for and at the direction of a former township supervisor of Alger county. The other case was the illegal cutting in 1907 from eight descriptions in another section of the county of 70,312 feet. The man alleged to have been responsible for this deal is also prominent in northern Michigan.

The supreme court has made a decision of interest in all local option counties, present and prospective. Hooper & Galvin, of Alma, leased to the Mueller Brewing company of Owosso for five years a building in Alma which the brewing company figured to use as a saloon. When Gratiot county went dry two years ago and the saloon was put out of business, the Muller company refused to pay any more rent for the building. Hooper & Galvin sued for the balance due, but the circuit court held that the adoption of prohibition in Gratiot vitiated the lease, and the supreme court has upheld this decision.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

She called out his name shrilly, her face raised eagerly to the bobbing light. Not until hours afterward was Genevra to resent the use of her Christian name by the man in the clouds.

Reaching over, she grasped the knotted end of the rope. A glance and a little tug were sufficient to convince her that the other end was attached to a support at the top of the cliff. It hung limp and lifeless. A sharp tug from above caused it to tremble visibly in her hands, and she dropped it as if it were a serpent. Again she heard the shout, and this time she called out a question.

"Yes," was the answer, far above. "Can you hear me?" Greatly excited, she called back that she could hear and understand. "I'm coming down the rope. Pray for us—but don't worry! I mean go inside until we land in the garden. It's a long drop, you know."

"Are you quite sure—is it safe?" she called, shuddering at the thought of the perilous descent of nearly 300 feet sheer through the darkness.

"It's safer than stopping here. Please go inside."

She dully comprehended his meaning. He wanted to save her from seeing his fall in the event that the worst should come to pass. Scarcely knowing what she did, she moved over into the shadow near the walls and waited breathlessly, all the time wondering why some one did not come from the chateau to lend assistance.

At last that portion of the rope which lay in the garden began to jerk and writhe vigorously. She knew then that he was coming down hand over hand through that long, dangerous stretch of darkness. The cliff reared itself sheer to the height of 350 feet directly behind the chateau. At the summit of this great wall a shelving ledge projected over the hanging garden. A rope dangling from this ledge would fall into the garden not far from the edge nearest the cliff. The summit of the cliff could be gained only by traversing the mountain slope from the other side. It was impossible to scale it from the floor of the valley which it bounded.

The rope was undoubtedly attached to the trunk of a sturdy tree at the brow of the cliff.

She could look no longer. It seemed hours since he started from the top. Every heart beat brought him nearer to safety, but would he hold out? Any instant might bring him crashing to her feet—dead, after all that he may have lived through during that awful night.

At last she heard his heavy panting—groaning almost—the creaking and straining of the rope, the scraping of his hands and body. She opened her eyes and saw the bulky, swaying shadow not twenty feet above the garden. Slowly it drew nearer the grass covered floor, foot by foot, straining, struggling, gasping in the final supreme effort, and then with a sudden rush the black mass collapsed, the taut rope sprang loose, the end switching and leaping violently.

Genevra rushed frantically across the garden, half fearful, half joyous. As she came up the mass seemed to divide itself into two parts. One sank limply to the ground, the other stood erect for a second and then dropped beside the prostrate, gasping figure.

Chase had come down the rope with another human being clinging to his body!

Genevra fell to her knees beside the man who had accomplished this miracle. She grasped his hands, warm and sticky with blood. She tried to lift his head from the ground, moaning with pity all the time, uttering words of encouragement in his ear.

Many minutes passed. At last Chase gave over gasping and began to breathe regularly, but heavily. The strain had been tremendous. Only superhuman strength and will had carried him through the ordeal. He groaned with pain as the two beside him lifted him to a sitting posture.

"Tell Selim to come ahead!" he gasped, his bloody hand at his throat. "We're all right!"

Then, for the first time, Genevra peered in the darkness at the figure beside her—a slight, graceful woman in oriental garb. The woman turned and lifted her face to the heights from which she had descended. In a shrill, eager voice she called out something in a language strange to the princess. A faint shout came from on high, and once more the rope began to writhe.

The princess passed her hand over her eyes, bewildered. The face of the woman in the light, half shaded, half illumined, was gloriously beautiful—young, dark, brilliant!

"Oh!" she exclaimed, startling to her feet, a look of understanding coming into her eyes. This was one of the Persians! He had saved her! A feeling of revulsion swept over her, combating the first natural, womanly pride in the deed of a brave man.

Chase struggled weakly to his feet. He saw the tense, strained figure before him and, putting out his hand, said:

"She is Selim's wife. I am stronger than he, so I brought her down." Then, looking upward anxiously, he shouted: "Be careful, Selim! It's easy if you take your time to it."

CHAPTER XVIII.

NEENAH.

"SELIM'S wife, Neenah saved my life." It was the next morning, and Chase was relating his experiences to an extraordinary company in the breakfast room. "She has a sister whose husband was one of the leaders in the attack. Neenah told Selim, and Selim told me. That's all. Days ago Selim and I cached the rope at the top of the cliff, and, hauling just such an emergency as this had intended to use it if we could reach the chateau in no other way. I figured that they would cut off all other means of getting into your grounds.

"Neenah came up from the village ahead of the attacking party, out of breath and terribly frightened. We didn't waste a second, let me tell you. Grabbing up our guns, we got out through the rear and made a dash across the stable yard. It was near midnight. The servants, all of whom were up and ready to join in the fight, attempted to head us off. We had a merry little touch of real warfare just back of the stables. It was as dark as pitch, and I don't believe we hit anybody. But it was lively scrambling for a minute or two, let me tell you."

Deppingham's big blue eyes were fairly snapping. His wife put her hand on his shoulder with an impulse strange to her, and Genevra saw a light blaze in her eyes. "I hope you potted a few of 'em. Serve 'em jolly well right if"—

"Selim says he stumbled over something that groaned as we were racing for the back road. I was looking out for Neenah." He glanced involuntarily from Lady Agnes to the princess, a touch of confusion suddenly assailing him. "Selim covered the retreat," he added hastily. "Instead of keeping the road we turned up the embankment and struck into the forest. Dropping down behind the bushes, we watched those devils from the town race pell mell, howling and shouting, down the chateau road. There must have been a hundred of 'em. Five minutes later the bungalow was afire. It was, as bright as day, and I had no trouble in recognizing Rasula in the crowd. Selim led the way, and I followed with Neenah. Hang it all, Browne, I didn't have time to save that case of cigarettes. I'm out nearly a hundred boxes."

"You might have saved the cigarettes if you hadn't been so occupied in saving the fair Neenah," said her lady-ship, with a provoking smile.

"Alas, I thought of that also, but too late! Still, virtue was its own reward. Imagine my delight when we stopped to rest to have Neenah divide her own little store of Turkish cigarettes with me. We had a bully smoke up there in the wood."

"Selim, too?" asked Browne casually.

"Oh, no! Selim was exploring," said Chase easily.

"Neenah is very beautiful," ventured Lady Agnes.

"She is exquisite," replied Chase, with the utmost sang froid. "Selim bought her last winter for a ten carat ruby and a pint of sapphires."

"That explains her overwhelming love for Selim," said the princess quietly. Chase looked into her eyes for a moment and smiled inwardly.

"We finally got to the edge of the cliff and unearthed the rope, which we already had fastened to the trunk of a tree. I was obliged to carry Neenah for the last quarter of a mile, poor little girl. She was tied to my back, leaving my throat and chest free, and down we came. Simplest thing in the world. Presto! Here am I with my happy family at my heels."

"Well, we can't sit here and dawdle all day!" exclaimed Deppingham. "We must be moving about—arrange our batteries and all that, don't you know. We've got to stave these devils off for two or three weeks at least, and we'll have to look sharp. Browne, that's the third cup of coffee you've had. Come along! This isn't Boston."

As they left the breakfast room Chase stepped to Genevra's side and walked with her. At the foot of the stairs, where they were to part, she extended her hand, a bright smile in her eyes.

"You were and are very brave and good," she said. He withheld his hand, and she dropped hers, hurt and strangely vexed. "Don't you care for my approval, or do you"—

"You forget, princess, that my hands are still suffering from the bravery you would laud," he said, holding them resolutely behind his back.

"Oh, I remember!" she cried in quick comprehension. "They were cut and bruised by the rope. How thoughtless of me! What are you doing for them? Come, Mr. Chase, may I not dress them for you? I am capable. I am not afraid of wounds. We have had many of them in our family, and fatalities too." She was never more serious than at that moment.

He shook his head with a smile on his lips. "I thank you. They are better, much better, and they have been quite properly bandaged already."

"Neenah?"

"Yes," he replied gently. She seemed to search his mind with a quick, intense look into his eyes. Then she smiled and said, "I'll promise not to bruise the wounds if you'll only be so good as to shake hands with me."

He took her slender hand in his broad, white swathed palm and pressed it fervently regardless of the pain which would have caused him to cringe if engaged in any other pursuit.

There was no longer any doubt as to the intentions of the disappointed islanders. Von Blitz and Rasula had convinced them that their cause was seriously jeopardized. They were made to see the necessity for permanently removing the white pretenders from their path.

Deppingham, on account of his one time position in the British army, was chosen chief officer of the beleaguered "citadel." A strict espionage was set upon the native servants despite Bailo's assurances of loyalty. Lookouts were posted in the towers, and a ceaseless watch was to be kept day and night. Chase on his first visit to the west tower discovered a long unused searchlight of powerful dimensions. Fortunately for the besieged, the electric light plant was located in the chateau grounds and could not be tampered with from the outside.

Britt was put in charge of the night patrol, Saunders the day. Selim under orders had severed the long rope with a single rifle shot. No one could hope to reach the chateau by way of the cliff.

Extra precautions were taken to guard the women from attacks from the inside. The window bars were locked securely, and heavy bolts were placed on the doors leading to the lower regions. It was now only too apparent that Skaggs and Wyckliffe had wrought well in anticipation of a rebellion by the native shareholders. Each window had its adjustable grates; every outer door was protected by heavy iron gates.

By night all Deppingham's forces were in full possession of every advantage that their position afforded.

Chase came from his room, still stiff and sore, but with fresh, white bandages on his blistered hands. He asked and received permission to light a cigarette and then dropped wearily into a seat near the princess, who sat upon the stone railing. Her trim, graceful figure was outlined against the darkness. A delicate, sensuous fragrance exhaled from her person, filling him with an indescribable delight and languor; the spell of her beauty was upon him, and he felt the leap of his blood.

"If I were you," he said at last, reluctant to despoil the picture, "I wouldn't sit up there. It would be a very simple matter for one of our friends to pick you off with a shot from below. Please let me pull up a chair for you."

She smiled languidly, without a trace of uneasiness in her manner.

"Dear officer of the day, do you think they are so foolish as to pick us off in particles? Not at all. They will dispose of us wholesale, not by the piece. By the way, has Neenah been made quite comfortable?"

"I believe so. She and Selim have the room beyond mine, thanks to Lady Deppingham."

"Agnes tells me that she is very interesting—quite like a princess out of a fairy book. You recall the princesses who were always being captured by ogres and evil princes and afterward satisfactorily rescued by those dear knights admirable? Did Selim steal her in the beginning?"

"You forget the pot of sapphires and the big ruby."

"They say that princesses can be bought very cheaply."

"Depends entirely upon the quality of princess you desire. It's very much like buying rare gems or old paintings, I'd say. Speaking of princesses and ogres, has it occurred to you that you would bring a fortune up the market?"

"Mr. Chase!"

"You know, it's barely possible that you may be put in a matrimonial shop window if Von Blitz and his friends

Secretary Wilson on the Chicago Stock Show.

The Honorable James Wilson, Secretary of Agricultural, in speaking of the International Live Stock Exposition, which is to be held this year from November 27 to December 10, said:

"The International Live Stock Exposition as an educational factor has carved a niche for itself."

"Producers are confronted with the problem of increased cost of every commodity that they use, greatly enhancing their expenditure."

"Obviously this necessitates rigid economy, and the man who reduces cost of production to a minimum secures maximum profits and has new surety of where others fail."

"The International is teaching us valuable lesson to the country at an opportune moment."

"During the period of cheap feed and cold storage economical education was not valued, because its benefits were not realized at the time."

"Under new conditions, the man who produces beef, pork and mutton cannot afford the use of out-of-date machinery or old-fashioned methods in his business."

"Economy requires that he handle the very best types of the most improved breeding; and these lessons can be obtained at the International Live Stock Exposition, which is acknowledged to be an educational institution of the highest order in its line."

FOR AGED PEOPLE

Old Folks Should be Careful in Their Selection of Regulative Medicine

With advanced age comes inactive bowels, lazy liver and sluggish liver. Nature is willing to perform her proper functions and requires assistance. Doctors say there is constant suffering from constipation and its attendant evils. Old folks should never use physic that is harsh and irritating.

We have a safe, dependable and altogether ideal remedy that is particularly adapted to the requirements of aged people and persons of weak constitution who suffer from constipation or other bowel disorder. We are so certain that it will completely relieve these complaints and give satisfaction in every particular that we offer them with our personal guarantee that they shall cost the user nothing if they fail to substantiate our claims. This remedy is called Rexall Orderlies.

Rexall Orderlies are even like candy. They have a soothing, healing, strengthening, tone, and regulative action upon the dry mucus lining and the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel. They produce a natural, successive contraction and relaxation of the muscular fibres of the bowel walls, generating a wave-like motion which forces their contents onward and outward; thus simulating nature in perfect bowel movement. They tone up and strengthen the nerves and muscles and restore the bowels and associate organs to more vigorous and healthy activity. They may be taken at any time without inconvenience; do not cause any griping, nausea, diarrhoea, excessive looseness, flatulence or other disagreeable effect. Try Rexall Orderlies on our guarantee: 36 tablets 25 cents and 12 tablets 10 cents. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store,—The Rexall store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. A Tiger in Wales.

Some years ago it was reported that a tiger had escaped from a travelling menagerie at Brecon, in Wales. Mangled sheep were said to mark its course across country to Llandrindod Wells, some farmers lost their dogs and on market days at Builth, Brecon, Penylont and Llanmarrach the wild beast was the center of rumor. Country schools were closed because parents feared to let their children go along the roads, and bands of armed men sought to hunt the tiger down.

This state of terror lasted a week, though no person was found who had actually seen the tiger, but only people who "had heard that some one else," and so forth. Then the truth was hunted down and the origin of the whole affair discovered at the remote hamlet of Ebeslw. the night the schoolmaster there in dismissing the children, playfully had warned them not to loiter in going home lest a tiger should get them.

The scared children accepted the warning as real and hastened home with stories of a savage beast lurking behind hedges or growling in ravines. And so the story grew, as stories do under the culture of imagination.

Result of Game with Traverse City Saturday Morning

CHAMPIONSHIP STILL UNDECIDED

Game was the Best Seen Here this Season

Clean Playing a Strong Feature—Hull a Star Though Every Member of the Team was There when Needed.

Saturday morning at the north side athletic grounds Charlevoix and Traverse City high school team played the last game of football this season, which resulted in a score of 0 to 0. Emerson Hull for the locals proved himself a star in every stage of the game. Papineau at end was always there when there was a chance to break a play made by the visitors. Carey's punting was extra good while Paddock showed his material in his sixty yard run in the first half by a neatly executed forward pass from Hull to Carey to Paddock. The locals play a game to be proud of, as they are lighter than most of their opponents, and no aggregation of gridiron rushers can get through their lines when all the regulars are in shape.

Doc Barney, of Charlevoix, was referee in the first half while Kehoe of Traverse City, was umpire, the men exchanging places in the second half. Raymond Spencer, of Traverse City and Cunningham of this city were time-keepers. Following are the plays of the game by halves:

Charlevoix kicked off to Traverse and the latter returned a punt to the thirty-five yard line; trick and scrimmage plays brought the ball to a twenty yard line when by a neat double forward pass from Carey to Hull to Paddock for a sixty yard gain was pulled off much to the amazement of Traverse. Traverse held the locals for downs the ball then going to the former. Charlevoix was holding so Traverse punted to the thirty yard line and with a succession of scrimmage and end plays carried the ball to the ten yard line, here they were penalized fifteen yards at the second down with twelve and one-half yards to gain, Charlevoix holding for down and the ball went over to the locals. Traverse held for three downs and took the ball, the locals again regaining on the downs. Carey punted to the thirty yard line to Traverse and time was called leaving the score 0 to 0 in the first half.

In the second half Traverse kicked to Charlevoix, Hull receiving and carrying the ball to the forty yard line. In the scrimmage play following Mayne made an eleven yard run. Another neat double pass from Hull to Carey to Papineau for twenty-five yards was executed and a forward pass by Carey to Durgan pulled off another gain for eight yards for Charlevoix. Traverse held for second down when Wallace at quarter punted fifteen yards to Traverse. Traverse recovered the ball and punted to thirty yard line with Hull for Charlevoix, receiving and making a twenty yard run up the field. Charlevoix makes a line scrimmage and quarterback Wallace carries the ball eight yards. Sayer for Traverse City broke the forward pass which followed to Durgan. Traverse recovered the ball and in a puzzling forward pass Charlevoix's end, Papineau, broke it and recovered the ball for the locals. Charlevoix made an unsuccessful forward pass and Traverse regained the ball to lose it again in another forward pass to the thirty yard line where Charlevoix recovered the pigskin and returned a thirty yard punt to Traverse. A twenty yard forward pass by the visitors was successful but Charlevoix held for three downs and recovered the ball on the twenty yard line and punted to the forty yard line with Traverse returning the punt to the sixty yard line. The visitors recovered the pigskin and in a repition of line rushes carried the ball to the thirty five yard line. Traverse punts on third down and Carey blocks the play, recovering the ball. Charlevoix punts to twenty yard line when time is again called, leaving the score 0 to 0 at the close of the best and last game of the season.

MICHIGAN HAS MADE GODD

Her Display of Fruit in Chicago Leads All Others

"We have met the enemy and they are ours" are words that can be truthfully uttered by the Western Michigan people in Chicago today. The exhibit made by the development bureau at the United States Land and Irrigation exposition now being held in the Coliseum is a surprise to everyone, even the promoters of the enterprise. Michigan went into the exposition program with some doubts. It was the Irrigation men's game and the entire plan of the expositioo was to show up and advertise the possibilites of irrigation farming. But the Michigan man believed in the quality of the products of their region and they went to work with a will. In consequence "Western Michigan" has made good. It has easily taken first place because of the quality of its fruit. It has gone to the Western men's show and beaten them at their own game.

MANY GOOD ROADS

Have Been Built in Michigan Since July 1

Over One Hundred Miles Have Been Built for State Reward.

Highway Commissioner Ely says that since July the state has accepted about one hundred miles of state reward road, and there are applications on file for nearly seventy-five more.

"We are making a special effort to keep in touch with the people regarding the bettering of the highways and we find that more interest is being displayed than ever before," adds Mr. Ely.

He also said that out of eighty-three counties sixty are working for the state reward in the construction of roads. Eight of this number are upper peninsula counties, and many of the northern counties of the lower peninsula are also after the reward.

It is noticed that some of the southern counties of the state have as yet made no such move and in some counties little progress has been made.

Sixty per cent of the roads already built and under construction are of stone or macadam, the balance gravel.

As is known for a stone or macadam road, the state pays a reward of $1,000 per mile and $300 for gravel roads. Many of the roads that have been constructed are wider and better than required by the state, which shows the interest taken by some townships.

The department has several inspectors on the road and inspections are made of the roads, both while under construction and after completion. About sixty per cent of the highway commissioners who are holding office in the state this year are new men, and the assistance given them by the state inspectors, it is stated, aids greatly in the work of building the roads.

The estimated cost states Commissioner Ely, for a gravel road is from $800 to $1500 per mile, and for stone or macadam, $1,500 to $4000 per mile, according to conditions existing.

The department has a report from Munising, where two miles of macadam road have just been completed at a cost of $18,004.15. Part of this road according to the report, was through an old cedar slashing and swamp, where the muck was from three to five feet deep.

A large portion of the stone used in the state in the construction of highways is limestone, which is said to make a fine road.

In Millington township, Tuscola county, and in an adjoining township, four miles of gravel road is under construction. Screened gravel is being used, and in the opinion of Commissioner Ely the screened gravel makes a far better road than when ordinary gravel is used. It usually takes a longer time for packing, but when once packed makes a road that wears.

TRUANCY LAW

Of the State of Michigan On Compulsary Education

Parents Can Save Expenses By Obeying the Law

While the compulsory education law of Michigan is better observed in Charlevoix county than in the majority of the counties of the state, there occasionally arises trouble on account of a misunderstanding of the law which we print below:

Every parent guardian or other persons having control of any child between the ages of seven and sixteen years shall be required to send such child to the public schools continuously during the school year fixed by the district in which such parent, or other person in parental relation may reside. the only exceptions to this rule are as follows:

(a) Any child who is being taught in a private or parochial school:

(b) Any child who has received an eighth grade diploma from the public schools:

(c) Any child who is physically unable to attend school; but a written statement from a competent physician must certify to this fact:

(d) Children over fourteen years of age whose services are essential to the support of their parents, may be excused by the county commissioner upon the recommendation of the district board in which such children reside:

(e) Children under nine years of age whose parents do not reside within two and one-half miles of some public school:

(f) Any child between the ages of twelve and fourteen years while in attendance at confirmation classes conducted for a period not to exceed five months in either of said years.

Parents or guardians should observe the above law with its exceptions carefully and be governed accordingly. It does not mean that one or two days out of the week are sufficient to send children to school simply to evade the truant officer, but they must be in regular attendance.

The state believes that it is for the welfare of the children who are to become citizens of this great commonwealth in the future in making such a law, therefore parents should put forth every effort to sustain it. Continual absence from school sooner or later develops into a lack of interest and a desire on the part of a child to remain away altogether when he sees that he is getting behind his class. In the present age of progress in industrial and educational affairs no boy or girl can afford to do without the advantages of the school room. While the results of tardiness may not be apparent they are nevertheless harmful to the child. He is forming the habits which are to guide his later career and punctuality is one of the greatest recommendations for a young man or woman starting out in life.

The teacher is obliged to report cases of absence and irregularity of attendance.

It is the duty of the commissioner of schools to see that the law is enforced. To do so is a source of expense to the taxpayers and every parent and guardian should see that their children attend regularly.

GREAT IN ALFALFA

Used As Hog Feed Pork Can Be Produced Cheaply

Crop is Being Raised Successfully in Charlevoix County

The New York Commercial, the leading commercial paper of the United States in an article under date of November 15th, is responsible for the following facts in regard to Alfalfa as a hog feed:

"For a great many years it was figured that in order to come out even the man who fattened hogs for market must get 5 cents a pound when corn was selling at 50 cents, 6 cents when corn was 60 cents and so on. Experiment has demonstrated that with corn at 50 cents and a big lot of Alfalfa ready to hand to be judiciously fed to the growing porkers a pound of pork will cost only about 3½ cents. One of the big industries in the Alfalfa belt is the feeding of porkers for market. There are many big ranches where Alfalfa and corn are raised especially for the purpose of transforming into pork."

"Public taste or rather the change in it, is back of the fact that packers are calling all the time for younger hogs to slaughter. The 18 months old hog once the staple of the market, is being pushed out by the six months feeder and farmers were quick to see that it was poor business to feed a hog for a longer period when he got a better price, pound for pound, for those fed from four to six months. People want younger lighter and leaner meats."

"The farmer is the chief gainer, because the quicker he gets his hogs to market the less it costs him. The big price hogs are bringing has brought about a betterment in environment and much of the new money in hogs comes from Alfalfa. Tests showing the feeding values prove that Alfalfa is worth 45 per cent more than clover, 60 per cent more than timothy and that one acre of it will pasture 30 hogs for six months."

So many of the farmers of Michigan when talking of Alfalfa will ask, "Is it good for feed" or "what is it good for?" To the man who reads and keeps up with current events it would seem that overwhelming proof has been given that Alfalfa is one of the most valuable food plants grown anywhere in the world and now that it can be grown successfully in Northern Michigan every progressive farmer should get a patch started with as little delay as possible.

HE IS SATISFIED

With Western Michigan and its Great Possibilities

H. S. Harsha shows us the following letter received from A. R. Struthers, of Hayes, who is now in Oregon. Mr. Struthers was one of the men who contemplated leaving western Michigan and going to Oregon for his home. After investigation he has changed his mind.

Leaving out the business features of the letter he states:

Bull Run, November 14, 1909

Dear Sir:—I find that it would not help me much here or anywhere else where I would like to live so I guess I will stay where I am. It froze here hard enough to make ice one-half inch thick, it has rained every day and night for the last two weeks and you may be sure there is lots of mud. The land is a heavy clay loam and it makes the worst kind of mud on top of it. This is a great apple country but they cannot do any better in that line than we can if we adopted their methods. Apples are dearer here than they are in Charlevoix. Cull fruit is all that is sold in Orgon the rest is shipped east and to London where they get a big price for it. They get five times as much for their apples on the trees, as we get delivered in Charlevoix. You can get two small apples that taste like turnips for a nickle or two winter banana for a quarter.

TWENTY-THREE ENTRIES

In Poultry Show of Retail Merchants Association

Held in This City Tuesday—A Growing Industry

The third prize day held under the auspices of the Retail Merchants Association Tuesday, was a success in every particular, there being twenty-three entries of poultry shown in competition.

The prize winners were:

Best looking turkey, Mrs. F. J. Meech.

Largest turkey, F. J. Meech.

Best bred turkey, F. J. Meech.

Best looking chicken, Mrs. Harrington.

Largest chicken George Cook.

Best bred chicken, Mrs. Edwards.

The number of entries demonstrated show that we have several good flocks of poultry in this county and that this profitable industry, which is forging ahead fast all over the country is bound to come to the front in this county.

SENATORIAL MATTERS

Tuesday's Grand Rapids Press Hands Out Some New Dope.

Probably Senator Fred Ming of the 29th district, composed of Charlevoix, Otsego, Montmorency, Alpena, Presque Isle, Cheboygan and Emmett counties will not run for a third term and there is some possibility that he may get into a three-cornered fight for congress with Frank Buell of Bay City and Congressman Lond forming the other angles of the triangle.

Attorney Leonard F Knowles of Boyne City and Representative James L. Sanborn of Ossineke, Alpena county, will be candidates for the senatorial seat. Knowles was a member of the constitutional convention and Sanborn has just finished his second term in the house. Knowles made something of a prohibition record in the "con con" and may be the Anti-Saloon league candidate. The district is one of the largest in the state, being laved by the waters of both Lake Michigan and Lake Huron and covering it in a primary contest is going to be a big job. A trip from Alpena to Boyne City involves traveling on three railroads a distance of 117 miles.

DEER LAKE

Farmers are housing their potato crop into storage awaiting higher prices.

Mathew Hardy purchased an eighty acre farm from L. F. Knowles of Boyne City, located in section 33.

There are several buyers looking up the vacant farm lands. It is expected that a great majority of the land will be set out to fruit trees, which are very profitable.

LETTER FROM ALGERIA, AFRICA

Written By Ida Veenstra a Former Charlevoix Girl

GRAPHIC DESCRIPTION OF VOYAGE

Eleven Days Sailing From New York to Algeria

Stop at Famous Rock of Gibralter Where Accident Was Met With—Continued Next Week.

Algeria, Africa, November 4, 1909.

Dear Friend:—

Well here I am in far away Africa. I left Grand Rapids October 1 and went to New York City which I think is one of the finest and most interesting cities I have been in thus far. We staid at Hotel Belmont, one of the finest places I have ever been inside. We were there a week and I never had such a fine time in all my life. Mrs. Putnam and I went driving and went through Central Park and along the Hudson river, one of the finest drives I ever had. We also went to see General Grant's tomb I went right into it and saw all parts of it. It is certainly fine. We left New York October 9 and the harbor was grand. It was rather a tearful affair as our ship pulled out. I cried to see so many other people cry.

We went on the Princess Irene of the North German Lloyd line, a very large and beautiful ship and were on the ocean eleven days. The first seven days we saw nothing but water but on the seventh day we passed the St. Georgia rock. This rock is about forty eight miles long and from six to one thousand feet high, there are three watre falls from the top of the rock and, oh! how pretty it was. Our steamer went right alongside of this rock for about three hours and every house on the rock was painted white and the roofs red. I could see the people waving their hands at us as the steamer passed by. It certainly was the most beautiful rock I ever saw. Well that is all we saw until a few more days when we came to our first stopping place, Gibralter, well we stayed there long enough to see the place and then went on. We went driving to Gibralter and talk about fun. While we were driving we broke down, and such times. Mrs. Putnam was so mad and I nearly died for want of a good laugh. I was told Gibralter was the largest rock in the world. Words cannot express the beauty of it and the funniest looking people I ever saw. This trip is certainly grand and I wish more poor girls could take one like it. After we left Gibralter we were on the ocean two more days then we landed at Algeria, Africa, where we will stay for some time. We got here at two o'clock in the morning and had to go ashore in a row boat in the dark of the night. It was dreadfully hard for Mrs Putnam but I could do it all right again if I had to.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should Be a Warning to Every Man and Woman

The newspapers and medical journals have had much to say relative to a famous millionaire's offer of a million dollars for a new stomach.

This great multi millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed his dyspepsia to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable. His misfortune should serve as a warning to others. Every one who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will give everything he owns for a new stomach.

Dyspepsia is caused by an abnormal state of the gastric juices. There is one element missing—Pepsin. The absence of this destroys the function of the gastric fluids. They lose their power to digest food.

We are now able to supply the pepsin in a form almost identical to that naturally created by the system when in normal health, so that it restores to the gastric juices their digestive power, and thus makes the stomach strong and well.

We want everyone troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia to come to our store and obtain a box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. They contain Bismuth Subnitrate and Pepsin prepared by a process which develops their greatest power to overcome digestive disturbance.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are very pleasant to take. They soothe the irritable, weak stomach strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, relieve nausea and indigestion, promote nutrition and bring about a feeling of comfort.

If you give Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets a reasonable trial we will return your money if you are not satisfied with the result. Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store,—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer.

"Well, we decided to break away from the guard and try to get to the chateau. It was their intention to take some of us back to the bank this morning to open the vault and the safes. That was to be our last act, I fancy. About 4 this morning a dozen of the women came up to where we were being held. They were flying from the town and ran into the arms of our guard before they knew of their presence. It seems that those devils down their had set out to kill their women because it was known that one of them had warned Mr. Chase of his danger. During the excitement brought about by their arrival in our camp we made a sudden attack upon our guards. They were not expecting it, and we had seized their rifles before they could recover from their surprise. I regret to say that we were obliged to kill a few of them in the row that followed. You let us in just in time. My word, it was a close shave."

"It's an ill wind that blows all evil," said Deppingham. "Mr. Bowles, you are welcome. We are a bit short of able-bodied soldiers. May we count on you and the men who came with you?"

"To the end, my lord," said Bowles, almost bursting his jacket by inflation. The others sipped their legs stanchly.

The arrival of the refugees from Aratat gave the chateau a stanch little garrison of sixty men.

"For the time being we are as snug as bugs in a rug," said Deppingham when all was over. "Shall we rejoin the ladies, gentlemen?" He was as calm as a May morning.

The three leaders found the ladies in the shaded balcony, lounging lazily, as if no such thing as danger existed. Below them in the grassy courtyard a dozen indolent Persians were congregated, lying about in the shade with all the abandon of absolute security. The three women in the balcony had been watching them for an hour, commenting freely upon these creatures from another world. Neenah, the youngest and prettiest of them all, had wafted kisses to the proud dames above. She had danced for their amusement.

Neenah had wafted kisses to the proud dames above.

Lady Agnes waved her hand lazily toward the group below, sending a mocking smile to Chase. "The Asiatic plague," she said cheerfully.

"The deuce!" broke in her husband, not catching her meaning. "Has it really broken out?"

"Deppy, you are the dullest creature I know!" exclaimed his wife.

Chase stalled broadly. "She refers to the newly acquired harem, Lord Deppingham. We're supposed to die with the Asiatic plague, not to—not to"—

"Not to live with it! Ho, ho, I see, by Jove!" roared Deppingham amiably. "Splendid! Harem! I get the point. Ripping!"

"They're not so bad, are they, Bobby?" asked Lady Agnes coolly, going to Browne's side at the railing. It may not have been true that Browne was in love with Lady Deppingham, but it was more than evident that his wife felt convinced that he was.

"Splendid!" was the sudden exclamation of Drusilla's vagrant lord. The others looked up, interested. "Say, everybody, Lady Agnes and I have hit upon a ripping scheme. It's great!"

"To better our position?" asked Deppingham.

"Position? What—oh, I see. Not exactly. What do you say to a charity ball, the proceeds to go to the survivors of the plague we're expected to have?"

The princess gave a quick, involuntary look at Chase's face. Browne's tall fellow countryman was now leaning against the rail beside her chair. She saw a look of surprised annoyance flit across his face, succeeded almost instantly by a hard, dark frown of displeasure. He walked a moment and then looked down at her with unmistakable shame and disapproval in his eyes.

"We might just as well be merry while we can," Browne was saying. "Think of what the French did at the time of the commune. They danced and died like ladies and gentlemen. And our own forefathers, Chase, at the time of the American Revolution—remember them too. They gave their balls and parties right under the muzzles of British cannon. And Vicksburg—New Orleans, too—in the civil war! Think of 'em! Why shouldn't we be as game and as gay as they?"

"But they were earnest in their distractions," observed Deppingham, with a glance at his wife's eager face. "This would be nothing more than a travesty, a jest."

"Oh, let us be sports," cried Lady Agnes, falling into an Americanism readily. "It may be a jest, but what odds? Something to kill time with."

"I don't like Mr. Browne," whispered Genevra suddenly. Chase did not reply. She waited a moment and then went on. "He is not like Deppingham. Do you understand?"

Lady Deppingham came over to them at that instant, her eyes sparkling.

"It's to be tonight," she said. "A fashionable charity ball—everything except the newspaper accounts, don't you know. Committees and all that. It's short notice, of course, but life may be short. We'll have Arab acrobatics, Persian dances, a grand march, electric lights and absolutely no money to distribute. That's the way it usually is. Now, Mr. Chase, don't look so sour! Be nice, please!" She put her hand on his arm and smiled up at him so brightly that he could not hold out against her. She caught the touch of disapproval in Genevra's glance, and a sharp, quick flash of rebellion came into her own eyes.

"What is a charity ball?" asked Genevra after a moment.

"A charity ball is a function where one set of women sit in the boxes and say nasty things about the women on the floor, and those on the floor say horrid things about the women in the boxes. It's great fun."

"Charity is simply a hallucination, then?"

"Yes, but don't mention it aloud. Mr. Britt is trying with might and main to prove that Bobby and I have hallucinations without end. If I happen to look depressed at breakfast time he puts it down—spells of depression and melancholia, do you see? He's a dreadful man."

Saunders was approaching from the lower end of the balcony. He appeared flustered. His face was red and perspiring and his manner distrait.

"Well, Saunders?" said Deppingham as the lawyer stopped to clear his throat obsequiously.

"I have found sufficient food of all descriptions, sir, to last for a month at least," said Saunders in a strained, unnatural voice.

"Have a cigarette, Deppy?" interposed Browne, seeing that something was amiss with Saunders. In solemn order the silver box went the rounds.

Saunders spoke up, as if suddenly recollecting something. "I have to report, sir, that the stock of cigarettes is getting very low. They can't last three days at this rate, sir."

The three men stared at him.

"Good Lord!" exclaimed Chase, who could face any peril and relish the experience if needs be, but who now foresaw a sickening deprivation. "You can't mean it, Saunders!"

"I certainly do, sir. The mint is holding out well, though, sir. I think it will last."

"By George, that is a calamity!" groaned Chase. "How is a man to fight without cigarettes?"

Genevra quietly proffered the one she had not lighted, a quizzical smile in her eyes.

"My contribution to the cause," she said gayly. "What strange creatures men are! You will go out and be shot at all day and yet"— She paused and looked at the cigarette as if it were entitled to reverence.

"It does seem a bit silly, doesn't it?" amended the stalwart Chase. Then he took the cigarette.

CHAPTER XX.

THE CHARITY BALL.

THEY were not long in finding out what had happened to Saunders. After a luncheon, while Browne and the three ladies were completing the preparations for the entertainment, Miss Pelham appeared before Deppingham and Chase in the former's headquarters. She had asked for an interview and was accompanied by Mr. Britt.

"Mr. Saunders has deceived me," she announced steadily. "I leave it to you if his attentions have not been most pronounced. Of course, if I wanted to, I could show you a transcript of everything he has said to me in the last couple of months. He didn't know it, but I managed to get most everything down in shorthand. I did it at the risk, too, your lordship, of being considered cold and unresponsive by him. It's most difficult to take conversation without the free use of your hands, I must say. But I've preserved it my own black and white every promise he made and"—

"I'm afraid it won't be good evidence," volunteered her lawyer. "It will have to be substantiated, my dear."

"Please don't call me 'my dear,' Mr. Britt. Never you mind about it not being good evidence. Thomas Saunders won't enjoy hearing it read in court just the same. What I want to ask of you, Lord Deppingham, as a friend is to give Mr. Britt your deposition regarding Mr. Saunders' attitude toward me to the best of your knowledge and belief. I'll take it verbatim and put it into typewriting free of charge. I—I don't see anything to laugh at, Mr. Chase!" she cried, flushing painfully.

"My dear girl," he said, controlling himself, "I think you are misjudging the magnitude of a lovers' quarrel. Don't you think it is rather a poor time to talk breach of promise with the guns of an enemy ready to take a pop at us at any moment?"

"It's no worse than a charity ball, Mr. Chase," she said severely. "Charity begins at home, gentlemen, and I'm here to look out for myself. No one else will, let me tell you that. I want to get the deposition of every person in the chateau. They can be sworn to before Mr. Bowles, who is a magistrate, I'm told. He can marry people and"—

"By Jove!" exclaimed Deppingham suddenly. "Can he? Upon my soul!"

"His manner changed as soon as that horrid little wife of Selim came to the chateau. I don't like the way she makes eyes at him, and I told him so this morning down in the storerooms. My, but he flew up! He said he'd be — if he'd marry me." She began to use her handkerchief vigorously. The men smiled as they looked away.

"I—I intend to sue him for breach of promise," she said thickly.

"Is it as bad as all that?" asked Deppingham consolingly.

"What do you mean by 'bad as all that?' He's kissed me three and again, but that's all."

"I'll send for Saunders," said Deppingham sternly.

"Not while I'm here," she exclaimed. "Just as you like, Miss Pelham. I'll send for you after we've talked it over with Saunders. We can't afford a scandal in the chateau, don't you know."

"No, I should think not," she said pointedly. Then she looked at Chase and winked, with a meaning nod at the unobserving Deppingham. Chase followed her into the hall.

"None of that, Miss Pelham," he said severely.

Saunders came in a few minutes later, nervous and uncomfortable.

"You sent for me, my lord," he said weakly.

"Sit down, Saunders. Your knees seem to be troubling you. Miss Pelham is going to sue you for breach of promise."

"Good Lord!"

"What have you promised her?"

"That I wouldn't marry her; that's all, sir," floundered Saunders. "She's got no right to presume, sir. Gentlemen always indulge in little affairs—flirtations, I might say, sir. It's most common. Of course I thought she'd understand."

"Don't you love her, Saunders?"

"Oh, I say, my lord, that's rather a puzzled question. My word, it is, sir. There may have been a bit of—er—well, you know—between us, sir, but—that's all, that's quite all, absurdly all, 'pon my soul."

"Saunders," said Britt solemnly, "I am her attorney. Be careful what you say in my presence."

"Britt," said Saunders distinctly, "you are a bloomin traitor. You told me yourself that she was used to all that sort of thing and wouldn't mind. Now see what you do! It's—it's outrageous." He was half in tears. Then, turning to Deppingham, he went on fiercely: "I won't be bully-ragged by any woman, sir. We got along beautifully until she began to shy cigarettes pots at me because Selim's wife looked at me occasionally. Hang it all, sir, I can't help it if the ladies choose to look at me. Minnie—Miss Pelham—was perfectly silly about it. Good Lord!" he groaned in recollection. "It was a very trying scene she made, sir. More than ever it made me realize that I can't marry beneath me."

"Saunders," said Lord Deppingham sternly, "she loves you. I don't understand why or how, but she does. Just because you have obtained an exalted social position at Hammersmith Bridge is no reason you should become a snob. I dare say she stands just as well at Brooklyn bridge as you do at Hammersmith. She's a fine girl and would be an adornment to you such as Hammersmith could be proud of. If you want my candid opinion, Saunders, I think you're a silly ass!"

"Do you really, my lord?" quite meekly.

"Shall I prove it to you by every man on the place? Miss Pelham is quite good enough for any one of us. I'd be proud to have her as my wife—if I lived at Hammersmith Bridge."

"You amaze me, sir!"

"She's a very pretty girl," volunteered Chase glibly.

"Oh, she could marry like a flash in I know of are crazy about her—good looking chaps too." The sarcasm escaped Saunders, who was fidgeting uncomfortably.

COB CHARCOAL FOR HOGS

An authority on hogs writes as follows: Charcoal should be kept before the hogs at all times. Most farmers know this, but few practice it largely because of the extra effort required to secure the charcoal. Charcoal made from corncobs is probably liked best by the hogs and is not difficult to make. To make this coal no kiln, pit or covering with earth is necessary. And yet the work must be so done that the result will be coal, not ashes. A still day in a dry time must be selected. Start three or four fires as near the supply of cobs as may be. When they are well started gather the cobs from the pens, lots and cribs and keep piling them on the center of the burning mass by basketfuls. Care should be taken not to put them on so fast as to smother the flames too much.

When the piles have been completed by using all the cobs, shovel up the edges on the heap that all will be burned. Allow it to burn until all blazing stops and the whole mass is in bright red coals. Then put out all fire by sprinkling at first, and afterward dashing on water until no steam escapes and no hissing sound is heard. It will require more water than the inexperienced would be willing to believe.

It is best to burn about ten or twelve bushels in each pile, as a heap of this size can be managed much better than when very large. If the coal is to be stored for future use it must first be allowed to dry out thoroughly. The shrinkage from burning will be rather more than one-half.

It is a mistake to pile all the cobs up first and then set fire to them. The fire will run all over the outside of the heap, but will penetrate into the center very slowly, and before this is reduced to coal the outside will melt into ashes. By the method here described the fire is always in the center, which is sure to be well burned. It will not be reduced to ashes, as it is shut off from the air somewhat by the fresh fuel that is thrown on all the time.

It is wasteful and unsightly to allow the cobs from all the corn fed in pens and lots to lie there and rot. They might be gathered up and taken to the manure lot, but not one farmer in a hundred will take that trouble. Besides, their value as a fertilizer is small compared with their worth as an aid to digestion when reduced to coal. The work and trouble are little, and the pay is big.

The man who has never fed this cob charcoal will be surprised at the amount the hogs will eat. For each ten or twelve hogs it will require a common sized pailful each day. The cobs from the corn fed then will just about furnish the coal they will eat, no more, no less.

In addition to this cob charcoal, they should have all the salt and ashes they want, but the three should never be mixed. No one can mix them in the right proportions. They should have ashes lying by them, but of these they eat but little. They should be salted twice a week. They should be fed each day what coal they will eat.

If the hogs are well and thriving don't be silly enough to feed them drugs. How can it make them better? It may and often does do great harm.

MRS. HARRIMAN, BUSINESS WOMAN

Will Personally Direct Her Great Fortune.

SHE HAS LEASED AN OFFICE.

Late Financier Showed Confidence In Her Ability When He Left Riches Solely to Her—Will Retain Her Social Position.

Mrs. Mary Averell Harriman, widow of Edward Henry Harriman and sole legatee of his estate, which makes her one of the wealthiest women in the world, will take charge of and personally direct the management of this great fortune of more than $100,000,000 and possibly twice that amount.

While Judge Robert S. Lovett may represent Mrs. Harriman in the boards of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railroads and he or some other man may represent her in the directorates of the other great corporations in which Mr Harriman was interested, it will be this woman who will direct the destinies of these great properties and who will give the final decision on all disputed questions that may arise.

Mrs. Harriman has leased offices on Fifth avenue directly opposite the new public library. Her offices will occupy the greater part of the second floor of the building.

She is the largest individual stockholder in the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific railroad, the Wells Fargo Express company and a large stockholder in many other corporations.

MRS. MARY A. HARRIMAN.

While the details of the management of these properties will be left to others, it will be Mrs. Harriman at one end of the telephone who will give orders on important matters.

No man has ever paid a higher tribute to the ability of a woman than did Mr. Harriman in his will of ninety odd words when he gave his entire estate to his wife and appointed her sole executrix.

That he had the utmost faith in her good judgment was shown when he did not impose a single trust and gave her full power to do as she pleased.

Inherited Her Ability.

Mrs. Harriman comes naturally by her interest in railroad affairs, for her father was William J. Averell, a native of Ogdensburg, N. Y., who, with his brothers, built a large part of the Rome, Watertown and Ogdensburg railroad, now a part of the New York central system. She inherited a fortune, which came to Mr Harriman at a time when he needed money the most and which, small as it was compared with the great estate he later accumulated, formed part of the capital which enabled him to get started in the acquisition of railroads.

For many years Mrs. Harriman has been one of the social leaders of New York, and it is not believed that the management of the large estate will in any way interfere with her social plans.

The Women.

They ought to vote, they ought to mix
As much does in his politics

They ought to vote, they ought to reach
The people by their powers of speech

They ought to vote; they ought to show
More than the proper way to go

They ought to vote; they ought to wield
The sword of virtue in the field

They ought to vote; they ought to rise
Superior to domestic ties

They ought to vote, they ought to smash
The votive influence of cash

They ought to vote; they ought to take
The lead in giving wrong the shake

They ought to vote, they ought to slug
The deadly doings of the jug

They ought to vote; they ought to heap
Opprobrium on the laws that sleep

They ought to vote; they ought to swat
Election evils on the spot

They ought to vote. They ought to do
What man does as he ought to do.

They ought to vote; they ought to say
In lovely woman's guilt that way!

WOMEN BUILD ROADS.

Start Campaign For Better Highways In Virginia, and Interest Is Spreading.

Women of the country sections in many parts of the state of Virginia have taken up the work of road building. In Fairfax county as well as in other counties this has been reported.

Miss Edith Thompson of Fairfax county, a pretty young woman, accompanied by her young sister and her mother, recently reported that they had built three miles of good roads single handed while their men worked on the farm. Other women in the state becoming interested in the campaign for better roads are following the example.

Ciling a Kansas Road.

Some time ago a mile of country road south of Sedan, Kan., was oiled under the direction of the Sedan Commercial club. Fifty dollars was paid for this, and it was all raised by public subscription. The oil had to be hauled so far that the cost of hauling was almost equal to the price of the oil. Nevertheless the total cost of dragging the road and of soaking it in oil was only $50.

The road was oiled in May and is yet in almost as good condition as it was when finished. It is well rounded up, with good drainage, and the oil has made it solid, something like asphalt pavement. The road is the talk of the farmers. They will go a mile or two out of their way just to use it in driving into Sedan.

Tribute to Road Drag's Value.

Walter Shoemaker, rural free delivery carrier in Drumore, Lancaster county, Pa., wrote to the Lancaster (Pa.) Automobile club about the split log road drag as follows:

"I drive on a piece of road on which the drag has been used and I can see that it is the best road I have on my entire mail route. I think the split log drag is just the thing to make good roads. Rural free delivery carriers want good roads just as well as the farmers want good roads and just as well as the automobile men want good roads, and we want to help the farmers all we can."

Bran New Stock of Cutters and Sleighs on Hand

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. I also handle all kinds of farm implements. I have the agency for the Superior drill, the best drill ever sold in Charlevoix. Remember the old stand. First-class horseshoeing and general repairing.

THEATRICAL

Theatregoers of Charlevoix may confidently look forward to Tuesday, November 30, as an evening of genuine enjoyment, for on that date, "The World and a Woman" will be presented at the Charlevoix Theatre. This play by its record of nearly ten months in New York and a years run in Chicago, has been stamped most emphatically as a success. It is a society "problem play" of present day American life; but unlike so many of those so called problem plays which have been produced during the past two seasons, "The World and a Woman" has, in addition to a wealth of bright dialogue and apt sayings, a foundation of the most intense heart and interest and reality. In a word, this play not only appeals to one's intellect and powers of reasoning, but it goes farther and deeper than that, to the heart of all real sensation.

Study Each Cow.

The only way to reap the maximum of net earnings from the dairy is to study each cow kept as a milker, familiarize yourself with its likes and dislikes and endeavor to please all, no matter how notional or how varied their tastes. Some dairymen claim that it does not pay to raise cows—it is cheaper to buy. This is true with some men who have no patience with the calf and do not know how to feed and care for it, but to the painstaker the only thoroughly satisfactory way of getting a good herd is to raise the calves or, rather, the cows, from calfhood. Then they will feel at home, be acclimated and will be all ready to work for you when the time comes. If you are not in the habit of keeping salt, hay and water before your calves all the time, just try it for a month and you will notice an improvement in their appearance that will surprise you.

Pen For the Bull.

Many build a pen for the bull. This is an excellent means for the animal to get sunshine and air, but he will not exercise in a pen. The pen should be used in connection with the tread power.

Exercise For Sows.

Force the sows to take a moderate amount of exercise before farrowing. A twice a day slow walk of fifteen minutes or more will keep them in good condition.

By order of the lighthouse board the following notice is sent out by Commander Casey B. Morgan, light house inspector of the eleventh district:

"At Sunrise on December 11, 1909, the lights and fog signals at the following named stations in Lakes Huron and Superior will be discontinued for the season: Spectacle Reef, Granite Island, Huron Island, Stannard Rock, Manitou Gull Rock, Otter Island, Michigan Island, Raspberry Island, Devil's Island, Sand Island, Rock of Ages, Isle Royal.

One of the largest real estate deals ever consummated in this part of the state was completed recently, when 50,000 acres of land belonging to the R. G. Peters Salt & Lumber Co. were sold to a Manistee dealer, who will open the vast tract for settlement. The land is situated in Manister, Wexford, Lake and Otsego counties and is from one to thirty miles from Manistee.

The tract contains land suitable for many farm industries some proportions being good for grazing, and others for fruit raising, grain raising and dairy purposes, the soil ranging from sand loam to clay.

A jury which was out from 9:00 p. m. until 2:30 a. m. Justice McBride's court at Owosso will receive but one day's pay instead of two, the balance being withheld as payment for pies they ate in a raid on the justice's pantry after the midnight hour. Court was held in the justice's home and the jury was locked in a front room for the night. While the court and the constable slept, the jury became hungry and individually and collectively broke out. When they got through with the justice's larder there wasn't enough left for breakfast, and the squire held that he was entitled to one day's pay each for the grub.

The first decision in an appeal from the tax assessment as fixed by the board of supervisors has been handed in by W. C. Kimball of Ludington, Will Pettit, of Benzonia, and Supervisor Adams in Wexford county. By the ruling of this appeal board, Bear Lake township whose valuation was $102,000 by the supervisors was cut down to $50,000 and that of Elon township was reduced from $119,000 to $1,000. Of this cut $20,000 was added to Manistee city and the balance distributed among the other townships. The tax payers in Bear Lake and Elon townships claimed that the county members of the board of supervisors permitted themselves to be influenced by the members of the board from Manistee and saddled upon them more than their share of taxes.

The State Foresters' association which met at Jackson is much pleased with the law passed this year providing for a committee on public domain and think that the best results should follow. The association has made earnest requests that the state make sufficient appropriations for the commission, and in addition thinks that a state forester should be appointed.

The association does not approve of state fire protection and thinks it should be taken care of by the commissioner of public domain.

The following recommendations were made to the legislature:

That every owner of a forest should use judgment in cutting of same, so as to insure a continuance of forest cover.

That a satisfactory and fair method of forest taxation be adopted. To assess all forests on farms at the value of bare lands and to tax larger forests on a land and harvest plan; also to exempt land from taxes for 20 years that have forests plantations started on land now bare of forest cover.

The following were chosen officers of the association:

President, Charles W. Garfield, Grand Rapids; vice-president, John H. Bissell, Detroit; secretary, Filibert Roth, Ann Arbor; assistant secretary, Henry G. Stevens, Detroit; treasurer, W. B. Mershon, Saginaw.

Over 40,000 acres of land have been set aside in Iosco, Oscoda and Alcona counties for a forest preserve and several well known rangers will be employed by the state in conjunction with the government at Washington, who reside on the land to keep fires from spreading and look out for trespassers. Several thousand acres of the seedlings of the different pine varieties will be set out and watched carefully and the present timber area will be carefully looked after. Houses will be built by the government for the forest rangers to live in, distributed about the tract so the land can be all covered by the hunters.

They're getting worse every minute.

Mrs. Graves gave the above testimonial in Aug. 1906 and when interviewed on July 20, 1909, she added; "I can still recommend Doan's Kidney Pills in the highest terms. The testimonial I gave in their favor some years ago still holds good. I have no objection to its continued publication.

Grape Catchup.

For grape catchup an old Connecticut housekeeper uses five pounds of grapes, two and a half liberal pounds of sugar, half a pint of vinegar, a tablespoonful of cloves, the same of cinnamon and allspice and half a teaspoonful of salt. Boil the grapes in the vinegar until they are soft. While they are cooking press them with an agate or wooden spoon to extract the juice. When ready strain through a very thin bag and squeeze the bag as hard as possible to extract every particle of pulp, leaving behind only the skins and seeds. Add the spices, salt and sugar to the juice and boil for about twenty minutes or until very thick and jellylike. This is nice with cold meats.—Exchange.

"So he refused to let you marry his daughter?"

"No, but he imposed conditions that I cannot comply with."

"What are they?"

HOOKWORM, FOE OF SOUTHERNERS

Disease to Be Fought by Rockefeller's Million.

DESCRIBED BY DISCOVERER.

It Will Take Twenty Years to Eradicate Malady, Says Dr. Stiles—Cripples Its Victims Bodily and Mentally. Can Be Cured Easily.

According to Dr. Charles W. Stiles, the discoverer of the hookworm disease, to eradicate which John D. Rockefeller has given $1,000,000, the malady is confined almost exclusively to the southern states—chiefly to the rural districts. It can be easily cured and easily prevented. Yet thousands of southern country school children are dwarfed both physically and mentally by this malady.

"Children who attend rural schools in the south are in many instances so enfeebled by the disease that they die before coming of age," says Dr. Stiles. "The south is educating rural children between the ages of six and twelve and burying them before they are twenty-one, thus putting their education into the grave.

Cause of Poverty and Distress

"Hookworm disease is one of the principal causes by far the most important single cause of the wretched physical, mental and financial condition of the typical 'white' of the south. It is not their fault then they are lazy, shiftless and lacking in ambition.

"By reason of their lack of decent sanitary conveniences many of the country schools and country churches in the south are breeding places for this malady. Whatever they may do for education and religion, they are in their present condition a menace to public health.

The Real "Negro Problem."

"The real acute 'negro problem' in the south at the present moment is the problem of the hookworm, for the negro is the principal scatterer of the parasite, propagating and disseminating it wherever he goes. The white people are the sufferers, particularly the tenant whites.

"The south does not need a higher birth rate, but a lower death rate. Incidentally, if the hookworm mischief were wiped out the labor problem of the south would be solved by saving the children.

"The leaders in southern thought are showing an acute interest in this subject and are co-operating in a movement to better the conditions of their much misunderstood, misinterpreted and misrepresented neighbors who are in less favorable financial circumstances. Southern physicians, especially the state boards of health, are alive to the subject, and many physicians are giving free treatment for this disease. The better class of southern newspapers are taking a live interest in the matter and are spreading the doctrine of proper sanitation.

Will Take Years to Eradicate It.

"The difficulties of the situation should not, however, be underestimated. It will take twenty years to eradicate the disease, but results should begin to show themselves in about five years."

Medical research in recent years has shown that cases apparently hopeless can be cured easily and quickly; that a couple of simple drugs will relieve a victim and ordinary sanitation will eradicate the hookworm in a neighborhood.

All needed for a successful battle against the disease, according to skilled investigators, were money and properly applied energy. Both are now at hand, thanks to Mr. Rockefeller. A recent article on the hookworm disease stated that $2,000,000 would wipe out every vestige of it in America. Those who heard of Mr. Rockefeller's gift confidently believed that if his $1,000,000 proved as efficacious as was expected he would give the other million readily.

The hookworm anchylostomiasis is its medical name and anchylostasis that of the disease; is a parasite, which may be roughly described as about the thickness of a hair and the length of a pin. It is plainly visible without the aid of a microscope. Doctors believe that it was imported to this country by the slaves from Africa.

The worm fastens itself to the walls of the intestines. There it justifies its name of "vampire," for it lives upon blood which it draws from the delicate membrane, which it punctures. One end of it—the hook end—holds it so fast that considerable effort is needed for its dislodgment. Sometimes hundreds of these worms afflict a victim. In an autopsy 865 were found.

Affects Body and Mind.

Not only do they draw away the life giving blood, but they fill the intestinal wall so full of holes that its functions are interfered with, and they withdraw so much blood that the victim's mind and body alike are affected.

A gnawing is produced, which is relieved by the eating of common clay, mortar, cloth, even human hair and soot out of chimneys. "Echolia," a mental disease, follows. If a question is asked, "What's your name?" the victim replies, "My name?" then thinks a long while before answering. Eventually there is a complete mental and physical breakdown.

PARIS NOT SO VERY GAY.

Can't Hold a Candle to New York, in Magoon's Opinion.

According to Charles E. Magoon, former governor of Cuba, American diplomat and globe trotter of many years' standing, Paris, with all its reputed gayety and folly, is not to be compared in these respects with New York.

"New York is a bigger place in every way," says Mr. Magoon. "Her buildings are bigger, her people are busier, and her lights—why, there is no comparison between the lighted thoroughfares of Paris and those of New York.

"The glare of Broadway has no equal in the world, and the promenaders of Paris, with their centuries of fame are not to be compared with America's great Broadway.

"And as for the hotels everybody knows that New York hotels are bigger and better than anything in the world and infinitely better living places than the hotels of the French capital.

"The night life of Paris is that of a remote village compared with a night in New York," said the governor. "By midnight the Place de l'Opera and the Rue de la Paix are completely deserted and as quiet as well regulated graveyards. Why, the doors of my hotel in the Place Vendome were closed at midnight. Imagine such a thing in New York! Just picture a New Yorker who would have to ring at the door of his own hotel to get in to eat a half hour after he had left a theater!"

THE TROUBLE IN GREECE.

Failure of Hellenic Cause In Crete Has Brought About Disturbance.

The cause of the naval revolt in Greece which led to the flight at historic Salamis is to be found probably in the recent failure of the Greek cause in Crete when the powers upon Turkey's protest removed the Hellenic flag which had been hoisted in Kanea. For this failure to secure Crete for Greece the blame was popularly laid to governmental inefficiency and as a result several weeks ago two battalions of troops at Athens mutinied. Retiring to the suburbs, they demanded the surrender of the high places held in the army by Crown Prince Constantine, commander in chief of the Greek army; Prince Andrew, a captain of cavalry, and Prince Christopher, a sublieutenant in the infantry.

The cause of the malcontents was espoused by the powerful Military league, which on Oct. 15 forced the chamber of deputies to vote a measure abolishing the right of the crown prince to hold the post of commander in chief and of the other princes to hold military commands. King George earlier in the day having persuaded his sons, the Princes Constantine, George, Nicholas and Christopher, to resign their commissions. Before the passage of the military bills in the chamber of deputies thirty royalist members showed their disapproval by withdrawing from the chamber. These loyalists insisted that the Military league was determined to force the king to abdicate.

To some observers it seemed that the crisis had been postponed by the retirement of the princes, but to all it was evident that it was likely to grow acute again if the Cretans returned deputies to the chamber at the next election.

Meanwhile the Military league, not satisfied with the humiliation of the royal family, issued an ultimatum demanding the enactment within twenty-four hours of an ordinance suspending all promotion for five years, the abolition of the post of rear admiral, heretofore held by Prince George, together with two vice admiralships and fifteen positions of lesser rank. The premier offered a compromise in the form of a bill altering the age limit for superannuation from sixty-five years to fifty-eight years. This was not satisfactory to the league, and thirty naval officers retired to the island of Salamis, upon which is situated the arsenal which these officers seized and where previous to the engagement between the fleet and their torpedo boats they intrenched themselves.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1903, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"Of course, you know, the breaking of the engagement—I should say the row—wasn't of my doing," he submitted, pulling at his finger joints nervously.

"I'm afraid it can't be patched up either," said Britt dolefully. "She's been insulted, you see."

"Saunders, we can't have our only romance marred by a breach of promise suit," said his lordship resolutely. "There has simply got to be a wedding in the end or the whole world will have us. So far you have been our prize young lover. You are the undisputed hero. Don't spoil everything at the last moment, Saunders. Patch it up and let's have a wedding in the last chapter. You should not forget that it was you who advocated multimarriage. Try it once for yourself, and if you like it, by Jove, we'll all come to your succeeding marriages and bless you, no matter how many wives you take unto yourself."

Saunders, very much impressed by these confidences, bowed himself out of the room, followed by Britt, of whom he implored help in the effort to bring about a reconciliation. He was sorely distressed by Britt's apparent reluctance to compromise the case without mature deliberation.

The charity ball began at 10 o'clock schedule time. Drusilla Browne, asserting herself as an American matron, insisted that the invitation list should include the lowly as well as the mighty. She had her way, and as a result the bank employees, the French maids, Antoine and the two corporals of Rapp-Thorberg's Royal guard appeared on the floor in the grand march directly behind Mr. Britt. Mr. Saunders and Miss Pelham.

"One cannot discriminate at the charity ball," Drusilla stoutly maintained. "The hoi polloi and the riff raff always get in at home, so why not here?"

"I shall feel as if I were dancing with my greengrocer," lamented Lady Agnes. Later on, when the dancing was at its height, she exclaimed with all the fervor of a charmed imagination: "I feel as the Duchess de What's-her-name must have felt, Bobby, when she danced all night at her own ball and then dressed for the guillotine instead of going to bed. We may all be shot in the morning."

The Indian fakers and showmen gave a performance in the courtyard at midnight. They were followed by the Bohemian tumblers and the inspired Persians, who danced with fearful abandon. There was but one unfortunate accident. Mr. Rivers, formerly of the bank, got very tight and fell down the steps leading to the courtyard, breaking his left arm.

Lord Deppingham and Chase kept their heads. They saw to it that the watch over the grounds and about the chateau was strictly maintained. The former led the grand march with the princess. She was more ravishingly beautiful than ever. Hallingsworth Chase was dazzled. Something seemed to shout over and over in his ears: "Now do you realize the distance that lies between? She was made for kings and princes, not for such as you!"

He waited long before presenting himself in quest of the dance he hungered for so greedily—afraid of her! She greeted him with a new, brighter light in her eyes. A quiver of delight long unrestrained came into her voice. He saw and felt the welcome in her manner. The blood surged to his head. He mumbled his request. Then, for the first time, he was clasping her fingers, touching her waist, drawing her gently toward his heart. Once as they swept around the almost empty ballroom she looked up into his eyes. Neither had spoken. His lips parted suddenly, and his fingers closed down upon hers. She saw the danger light in his eyes and knew the unuttered words that struggled to his lips and stopped there. She never knew why she did it, but she involuntarily shook her head before she lowered her eyes. He knew what she meant. His heart turned cold again, and the distance widened once more to the old proportions.

He left her with Bobby Browne and went out upon the cool, starlit balcony. There he gently cursed himself for a fool, a dolt, an idiot.

The shouts of laughter and the clapping of hands on the inside did not draw him from his unhappy reverie. He did not know until afterward that the official announcement of the engagement of Miss Minnie Pelham and Thomas Saunders was made by Bobby Browne and the health of the couple drunk in a series of bumpers.

Chase's bitter reflections were at last disturbed by a sound that came sharply to his attention. The noise came from directly below where he stood. He peered over the stone railing. The terrace was barely ten feet below him. A mass of bushes fringed the base of the wall dark, thick foliage. The next moment a dark figure shot out from the shadows and slunk off into night, followed by another and another and yet others, seven in all.

Then the truth suddenly dawned upon him. The prisoners had escaped from the dungeon!

He dashed into the ballroom and shouted the alarm. Confusion ensued.

"There's been treachery," he explained quickly. "Some one has released the prisoners. We must keep them from reaching the walls. They will overpower our guards and open the gates to the enemy. Britt, see that the searchlight is trained on the gates. We must stop those fellows before it is too late. Time enough to hunt for the traitor later on."

Two minutes later a swarm of armed men forsook the mock charity ball and sallied forth to engage in realities. Firing was soon heard at the western gate, half a mile away. Thither the eager pursuers rushed. The wide ray from the searchlight swung down upon this gate and revealed the forms of struggling men.

The prisoners had fallen suddenly upon the two Greeks who guarded the western gate, surprising them cleverly. Both fell under the clubbed guns of their adversaries.

Chase and Selim were not more than a hundred yards away when the Greeks went down. The blinding glare of the searchlight aided the pursuers, who kept outside its radius. The fugitives, bewildered, confused by the bright glare in which they found themselves, faced the light boldly, five of them kneeling with guns raised to protect their two companions who started across the narrow strip, which separated them from the massive gate. Selim gave a shout and stopped suddenly, throwing his rifle to his shoulder.

"They have the keys!" he cried. "Shoot!"

His rifle cracked a second later, and one of the two men leaped into the air and fell like a log. Chase understood the necessity for quick work and fired an instant later. The second man fell in a heap thirty feet from the gate. His companions returned the fire at random in the direction from which the well aimed shots had come.

"Under cover!" shouted Chase.

"Under cover!" shouted Chase. He and Selim dropped into the shrubbery in time to escape a withering fire from outside the gates. The searchlight revealed a compact mass of men beyond the walls. It was then that the insiders realized how near they had come to being surprised and destroyed. A minute more, and the gates would have been opened to this merciless horde.

The prisoners, finding themselves trapped, threw themselves upon the ground and shrieked for mercy. Lord Deppingham and the others came up and, scattering well began to fire at the mass outside the wall. The defenders were at a disadvantage. They could not locate the opposing marksmen on account of the blinding light in their faces. It was but a moment before they were scampering off into the dark wood, shrieking with rage.

The five fugitives were soon joined by two Greeks from the open space in front of the gates to a point where it was safe for the defenders to approach them without coming in line with a possible volley from the forest.

A small force was left to guard the gate. The remainder returned as quickly as possible to the chateau.

Immediately upon the return to the chateau an inspection of the dungeons was made, prior to an examination of the servants in the effort to apprehend the traitor.

The three men who went down into the damp, chill regions below ground soon returned with set, pale faces. There had been no traitor!

The man whose duty it was to guard the prisoners was found lying inside the big cell, his throat cut from ear to ear, stone dead! He had been seized from within as he came to the grating in response to a call. While certain fingers choked him into silence, others held his hands, and still others wrenched the keys from his sash. After that it was easy. Deppingham, Chase and Selim looked at each other in horror, and, strange as it may seem, relief.

Death was there; but, after all, death is no traitor.

Aramaic, one of the languages which are used in the Old Testament, was the Semitic dialect spoken by the people north of Canaan when the Israelites took that country. From the days of the Babylonian exile Aramaic was used as the medium of communication between Jews and other Semitic people and gradually supplanted Hebrew even in Palestine, where it became the common language about B. C. 200.

WEATHER ON THE FARM.

Proper Exposure of Thermometers. Plans For Rainfall Gauges.

No matter how good a thermometer may be, it will not indicate the true temperature of the air unless it is properly exposed. The variations in temperature reported by neighbors in discussing how cold or how warm it was at a given time are more frequently due to lack of uniformity in the exposure of the instruments than to errors in the instruments themselves or to actual differences in temperature at the various stations.

In a proper exposure the thermometer should be protected from the direct rays of the sun as well as from the reflected heat of pavements, walls, etc., and at the same time should receive a free circulation of air all around it. If the sun shines on the thermometer the glass portions and the mercury are heated above the temperature of the surrounding air. In the same way the heat from the side of a building or from the surface of the ground may make the thermometer warmer than the free air.

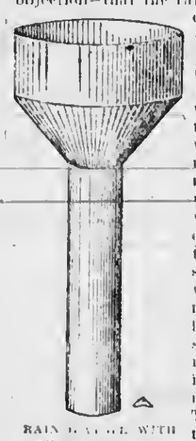
The best place to expose a thermometer is in the center of a slat shaded box, two or three feet on a side, with a door opening to the north and having a double roof, with an air space between.

In case such a shelter cannot be secured or constructed the next best exposure is on the north wall of a building where the instrument will be protected as much as possible from the sun's rays and from the heat of surrounding objects.

Another instrument used in recording meteorological conditions is the rain gauge. Any cylindrical vessel exposed in an open space, where surrounding trees or buildings are far enough away not to stop the rain, will indicate the amount of rainfall. An ordinary tin can with straight sides will serve the purpose. The rainfall is measured regularly morning and evening by inserting a rule and observing how high the rule is wetted.

The ordinary rule marked off in eighths and sixteenths of an inch may be used, but in order to compare the results with the records of the weather bureau it is well to use a rule marked off in tenths of an inch.

Such a simple rain gauge has this objection—that the rainfall in any one day is frequently so small that it cannot be measured with much accuracy. To obviate this difficulty the receiving vessel must be made with a funnel shaped tube, with an opening whose area is one tenth that of the receiving vessel. A rainfall which would measure one inch in the upper vessel will then measure ten inches in this measuring tube. The readings can therefore be more accurately made.



RAIN GAUGE WITH MEASURING TUBE.

The readings taken from the measuring tube must of course be divided by ten in order to get the actual rainfall. A diagram showing the form of such a gauge with measuring tube attached is shown in the second cut. In the standard rain gauge the upper cylinder has an inside diameter of eight inches, while the diameter of the measuring tube is 2.53 inches. The weather bureau rain gauge is shown in position in the first cut to the right of the thermometer shelter. Keeping a rainfall record is one of the most interesting tasks that a farmer or gardener can undertake. The preservation of the records will enable him to compare the rainfall and crop conditions for any one season with those for other seasons.

Wrapping Fruit In Paper.

Any method of handling apples that hastens the ripening after the fruit is packed shortens the period of commercial value. Any treatment that checks the ripening prolongs the marketing period. The value of wrapping apples in paper has been tested in both seasons by the experiment station of the Iowa College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts. The comparison was made with duplicate quantities of fruit that were grown and handled in the same way. One lot was not wrapped and with the other each apple was wrapped in unprinted newspaper. With some varieties like the Gano, Roman Stem, Salome, Wheaton and other hard, late ripening sorts the advantage of wrapping in paper was not very apparent. But with tender varieties like the Clemons, Jonathan and Wealthy a wrapper was a distinct advantage in extending the life of the fruit, preserving its natural brightness and lessening the amount of decay. A wrapper serves to reduce the bruising that may result from poor packing or from rough handling in transportation. It retards shriveling and adds to the value of the fruit by preserving its attractive appearance. The wrappers cost about 20 cents per thousand for newspaper 9 by 12 inches.

Luxurious Beehives.

A schoolmaster in a small German town, being very fond of bees, resolved to build for them something novel in the way of a home. As beehives are generally of the same size, color and shape, it is sometimes difficult for a bee to find his own particular home, so it came about that this kind hearted schoolmaster decided to give each of his hives some distinguishing mark, so the buildings represent an inn, castle, house, cottage, windmill, etc. There are also a number of animals, including an elephant, carved from wood, closely resembling their living brothers. The owner is naturally very proud of his creation and is constantly enlarging it.

Celery should be kept growing rapidly and without interruption. A check in growth will often cause the plant to go to seed instead of producing edible stalks.

Five Hundred Charlevoix County Patrons Will go to Traverse City in 1909

We are sorry to inform the patrons of the county that some part at least of the glory of our trip to Traverse City has been taken from us for the good of the order.

The facts are that under ruling of the Inter-State Commerce Law railroads are not permitted to furnish special trains to any meeting where a general reduced rate has been given.

When the officers of the Charlevoix County Pomona entered into an agreement with the Pere Marquette for a special train no general reduced rate was asked for, after our contract and all arrangements had been made, however, the executive committee of the State Grange asked for a reduced fare for all over Michigan but they were informed that on account of a special train being leased to the Charlevoix County Pomona, no general reduced rate could be given. It then became a question with the officers of our county whether we should hold our contract and by so doing compel the whole state to pay the full fare or relinquish our contract that the whole state might enjoy the rate of one and one-half fare for the round trip.

Feeling that the good of the order demanded this sacrifice on our part we have allowed the railroad company to cancel our contract for a special schedule and to substitute their regular train leaving Charlevoix at 9:05 a. m. and arriving at Traverse City at 11:35 a. m. The rate from Charlevoix for the round trip being $1.00, tickets being good to return until Saturday night.

We believe that this action will meet the approval of the patrons at large and that they will work with the same energy to secure five hundred for Traverse City.

SUB-GRADE MAKING.

Treatment of This Important Factor In Road Building.

KIND OF MATERIAL TO USE.

Nothing but the Best Obtainable, Says Highway Commissioner—Surfacing Is Also a Prominent Feature That Demands Strict Attention.

A well built road's chief characteristic is not unlike a well constructed house, at least in one respect. Both will have a similarity—namely, a tight roof and a dry cellar. Such a road must have the ability to sustain and hold up into position it should occupy the wearing surface of the road, whether it be two inches or two feet in depth. Any yielding of the sub-grade will be fatal to the road. The whole question of dust laying and road preservative requirements of the hour is simply relegated to a secondary position when compared with this very important feature of the construction, and the remarkable aspect of this important part of road building is that it is not so much the expense, for the same principle can be adopted in the simple hauling of a load as that which will have to be employed in the most expensive construction that we are called upon to build today.

The first principle to follow in every case is to properly drain the section of road to be improved, after which you then take up the question of sub-grade, or foundation upon which to build your road. I have found the best material with which to construct a sub-grade is sand or gravel. Disintegrated rock, with an admixture of light loam, makes a capital sub-grade.

Sprinkling the sand before rolling, using a light roller before using the steam roller or lightening the roller by relieving the boiler of one-half its water capacity is a great assistance in firming the road, as the sand will not then creep before the roller, thus making the sub-grade firm. A little sub-soil placed on top of the sand is a very good practice. This will prevent the material from being pushed ahead of the roller, and it will make a good sustainment for the stone or gravel. If something is not done to make a sandy foundation firm it will shift.

Slighting the sub-grade is sometimes practiced by contractors, with the result that they do not gain anything, for the contractor has to pay in the end an increased expense owing to the fact that there will be a greater shrinkage in the stone.

The wisest contractor is the man who will spend more time with his 15 cents an hour help in forming the sub-grade and thereby require less stone or gravel and other incidental expenses. This is often the reason why the tonnage of stone per mile has been largely exceeded over the original estimate of the contractor. This is very easily demonstrated by taking the cost of the stone per ton, with freight, the haul from the cars, the time consumed in applying the stone on the road, to say nothing about the expense of watering and rolling required to get the road into a perfect bond—firm and unyielding.

But you will ask naturally, "Is not the road better by reason of the fact that more stone has been used?" Not at all. This would be true if a uniform depth of stone were on the road. But it is an intermittent depth. In some places there may be four inches of stone, while in other places there may be eight inches. The influence of the roller is not uniform where the sub-grade is not sufficiently hard and firm. Wherever there is an intermittent depth of stone the road will develop a weakness because the pressure of the roller on the road has not been uniform.

You must have a good, well built, substantial foundation as well as a good surface—a roof to your road. I do not and never have believed that the surface of the road can ever become an accomplished fact until this all important and necessary adjunct to a good road—the foundation is taken care of.

Antedating the surface must come directness to your road, then the reduction of these grades to a minimum, then the question of drainage. Of these the most important is under and surface drainage, after which comes the question of surfacing, the least important of all things connected with road building. You want directness to your road to shorten the distance and minimize the danger and to carry the surface water to its nearest and best exit point. It is not enough to get the water off and out from the road, but it must be got away from the road. When we have done this we can commence to properly construct the sub-grade, and not before.

As a general proposition, in accomplishing a well built sub-grade it is always well to remove all loam, roots and vegetable matter from the proposed travel part of the road; also everything of a springy nature or anything found in excavating for said roadway that will be liable to heave or settle and fill all such places with clean sand or gravel.

Where it is necessary to fill in bring the sub-grade up to the height required I have found in my practice where the filling exceeds one foot in depth that the filling should be deposited in courses not to exceed twelve inches in depth, loose measurement, and require that each course shall be extended across the entire fill and completed before commencing another course, no matter if the fill be two or twenty feet. And this method should be followed with each succeeding course until the established grade is reached. The constant traveling over each of the courses by the teams employed in handling the material will remove the possibility of ever having a cracked fill or one that will slide after the road has been constructed. This is a very important matter, I find, and I have used it in my work in my own state. I also find that in the ruts it is well not to plow down below that point that is to be the finished grade of the sub-grade, but to keep it a sufficient height above that so that when the roller is placed on the work it will make a good solid foundation, and you will not have to resort to filling in the cut to bring the sub-grade up to the grade desired. These two principles of cut and fill will be found to work to great advantage in the proper construction of a road.

The shape, or contour, of the sub-grade has been somewhat a matter of controversy, some engineers holding to the level line foundation and putting on an extra depth of stone or material in the center to make the contour or shed from the center line of the road to the berms, or shoulders, while other engineers have given the sub-grade or foundation upon which the wearing material is to be placed the same contour as the finished road. I have used this latter method in my own work in my state by reason of the fact I believe it makes a better foundation and that the uniform depth of stone at the shoulders will assist in holding the crown of the road in shape and furnish a sustainment at the shoulder line better than to have a less depth of stone at the shoulders and a greater depth at the center of the road. It also assists in case of a breaking up of the road or a fracture or other developments in draining to the side, or shoulder, of the road.

The forming of the shoulders is a very important matter. They are really the support of the road. It has always been my practice when making a shoulder in the fills to lay out my road and put the newly added material ten or twelve inches into the new travel path, tamping it down firmly and then cutting back to the line, thereby making a good, firm shoulder to work to and to hold in place the stone or gravel in the travel path of the road.

It is a difficult matter to treat this question as intelligently through the medium of the written word as it would be with charts, but if these principles are followed in building the sub-grade a good foundation upon which to put the wearing surface will result.—James H. MacDonald, State Highway Commissioner of Connecticut, in Good Roads Magazine, New York.

CONVICT ROAD BUILDERS.

Inmates of Georgia Prisons Beautifying Highways.

The roads of Swainsboro, Ga., are fast being converted from veritable sand beds into beautiful turnpike clay roads. The county chain gang, which is now about fifty strong, including thirty felony convicts, Emanuel's quota of the state convicts, is doing fine work in road building, under the supervision of M. R. Boatright, who has had much experience in practical road building.

However, the people of the county, while awakening somewhat to the fact that they must be up and doing in matters pertaining to roads if they would keep apace with their neighboring counties, still do not show the proper interest in the construction of their roads, or, rather, in the keeping up of the roads after they are built by the chain gang. There seems to be an idea abroad that it is the chain gang's province to keep up the roads as well as to construct them, and this idea must be eliminated before a thorough good road movement can be installed and substantial improvements made on the county's highways.

Object Lesson In Good Roads.

A Glastonbury (Conn.) rural free delivery carrier became tired of traveling the dirt roads on his route and, finding that he had no right to dictate to road officials in regard to needed repairs, took a little of his spare time and had the fourth postmaster general advised on the subject. That official replied that if the roads were not put in repair at the earliest possible date—thirty days, the carrier can deviate from those portions of his route that are out of repair and inform the families residing on these roads that the department will not maintain rural service over any road that cannot be traveled by the carriers with facility and safety at all seasons of the year.

A new "copper," just appointed and not long over, was put out in Brooklyn. He found a large dead dog at the corner of two streets.

He took out his book and wrote, "This morning at 7.15 a. m. I found a dead dog at the corner of"— And he looked up to see what the streets were and discovered they were Keap and Kosciusko.

He studied for a long time. Then he dragged the dog by the tail to the corner of Keap and Kent streets.—Exchange.

WESTERN MICHIGAN WINS VICTORY

Land Values in This Section Will Be Doubled

AS RESULT OF CHICAGO LAND SHOW

In the Opinion of Manager Rowe and Director Payton

Michigan Fruit In Comparison With Western Product Beat it to a Finish—Charlevoix County Scenes in Booklet

County Clerk Payton returned home Friday night from Chicago where he had been for the past ten days attending the Land and Irrigation Exposition as one of the directors of the West Michigan Development Bureau and assisting in urging the claims of Western Michigan and Charlevoix county.

Mr. Payton informs us that the Western Michigan display had everything else beat to a finish and the result of the showing made will be the doubling of land values in this county, Mr. Payton alone having over fifty inquiries to answer of parties who were so impressed with the showing made that they are seeking homes in this section. The slogan of Western Michigan, "Fruit with Flavor," backed up by the fruit itself was a winner every time.

The booklet advertising Western Michigan, of which the bureau put out 250,000 copies, contained three Charlevoix county scenes, George Durance of Charlevoix township in his cabbage patch, pear trees on the farm of Albert Beattie of Marion and the residence of Judge Stroud at Horton's Bay.

To show how the West Michigan exhibit impressed outsiders we print the following from the Chicago Tribune of November 25:

That the value of the land exposition is appreciated generally and will bring rich returns to the wooers of the soil was declared in positive terms by George E. Rowe of Traverse City, Michigan, manager of the Western Michigan Development Bureau, who is in charge of the Western Michigan exhibit, one of the best worth looking at features of the show.

"This land show under the auspices of the Tribune here in the Coliseum, will double the price of land in Michigan," said Mr. Rowe. "I mean just what I say—that the educational value of this exposition will arouse an interest in Michigan land that will be simply amazing.

"The fact that our people can compare their products with the products of the west, gives them new confidence."

"What do you think of these Michigan fruits on exhibit here?"

"Can't be beat," responded the observer, speaking colloquially, but truthfully.

"Well," said Mr. Rowe, "When Chicagoans look at the Michigan display, they are beginning at Jerusalem. They have ocular proof that right in their own neighborhood is a fruit country as wonderful as anything in the west. These products, remember, were not furnished by expert horticulturists who make a specialty of the care of orchards. They were furnished by farmers who simply sent in what they had."

The charms of the big exhibit were self-evident. To compass the result, twice as much fruit as ever was exhibited by the state of any other exhibition in history was used. There were 300 bushels of apples in enormous pillars of wide mesh wire netting what might have tempted Samson.

The name MICHIGAN was spelled in great letters by symmetrical little Johnathans hung across the exhibit.

Two hundred bushels of apples were exhibited in bushel boxes, making a total of 500 bushels of apples on exhibit from Western Michigan. Then there were great glass jars filled with fruit so luscious as to tempt even the most subject victim of indigestion.

Several bushels of McIntosh apples from Michigan were rescued from South Water street just for the purpose of showing that the shipments of Michigan apples to Chicago are fully up to the standards of the other fruit on exhibit.

Mr. Rowe was the receipent of numerous congratulations from visitors to the West Michigan exhibit. He showed photographs of cherry picking in Michigan on cherry farms which have returned more than $500 an acre annually to the holders. Then he attracted their attention to another feature of the Western Michigan exhibit—the seeds.

Seeds at shows generally are put up in small quantities in small jars, but Mr. Rowe has brought in an innovation. His seeds, some of which are worth $50 per bushel, are in bushel boxes with an expert in charge of them to tell visiting farmers what they will do. There are 100 bushels of seeds—a record-breaking quantity—in the exhibit under Mr. Rowe's care.

Some of the seeds worth $50 a bushel are early string beans and peas. Mr. Rowe said they were "valuable because they matured earlier in Michigan than elsewhere on account of the shortness of the season. When planted elsewhere the seeds are caught off their guard and get up ahead of the season."

Forty-two boards of trade and nineteen counties are banded together in Western Michigan to inspire the growers to put forth their best efforts. It is this organization of boosters which arranged the display at the Coliseum. Fifty bushels of grapes to be used for decorative purposes during the succeeding days of the show are on the way to the exhibit from Michigan. They will be festooned across the enclosure.

LAUNCH IS WRECKED

W. S. Stripp and Grandson Among Passengers

At Everett, Washington—Mr. Stripp and Grandson Swim Ashore.

The Everett, Washington, Morning Tribune of November 19, gives an account of the capsizing of the launch, Norene, near that city the day before. Among the passengers were W. S Stripp, formerly of this city, and his grandson, Mr. Stripp swimming ashore with his grandson. The account of the feat of Mr Stripp follows:

In a letter to the Tribune, W. S. Stripp, one of the passengers on the Norene when she capsized Thursday, requests a correction of the account printed with reference to himself and his little five-year-old grandson, Raphal C. Kanagy, the nephew of W. C. Stripp. The child's grandfather says: "My grandson and I were never thrown into the water off the Norene. No effort was made by those on board to get us back more than to call after us to come back as they thought she would sink no deeper. The facts are: When the cabin became deluged we climbed out through the window and took refuge by the railing on the elevated side of the boat, and had just time to adjust life preservers when she sank, leaving the rail about two feet below the water. There being no rescuing parties in sight from Everett or Mukilteo, I decided to swim ashore with my grandson, Raphel C. Kanagy, nephew of W. C. Stripp. After discussing the taking off of my storm coat I only unbuttoned and used it as a support. We then took to the water which was up to my waist and made fine headway for the shore considering the land breeze and receding tide. When a little over half way from the wreck to the shore two noble fellows came with a row boat and hurried us in. My grandson and I were, by a good fire and receiving princely treatment some time before any rescuing parties reached the Norene. Allow me to add (excepting two foreigners) a cooler headed bunch never met disaster."

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 16

Day When Traverse City Will be Taken by Charlevoix

Eagle of that City Tells of Charlevoix Patrons and Master Ward.

To show how the grangers of Charlevoix county have stirred things up in Traverse City we clip the following from the Traverse City Eagle of November 26.

One feature not touched upon by the Eagle is the exhibits of Charlevoix county products which have been gathered by a committee headed by D. S. Payton, which will be worthy of the county from which they come. The Eagle article follows:

The Charlevoix county forces that are planning upon an invasion of Traverse City, Thursday, December 16th, are being rounded up by E. B. Ward, who is a leader of no mean ability. For almost a year he has been rallying the Charlevoix grangers with the slogan, "Five hunderd Charlevoix Patrons will go to Traverse City in December." This has been printed on cards, on leaflets, on letter heads and envelopes and has been kept constantly before the patrons of Charlevoix county. Early in the present calendar year a song in which the above slogan occurs was composed, and this, the Charlevoix people have been singing to the tune of "Marching Through Georgia."

Under Colonel Ward's leadership the Charlevoix grangers will appear in Traverse City early on the morning of December 16th, and they will remain all day, and perhaps all the next day. They will appear on our streets resplendent in gorgeous badges proclaiming that Charlevoix is the most important city in the northern part of western Michigan. Perhaps they will sing their song for us!

Colonel Ward is a veteran in the grange service. He has been through many a campaign. For twenty-one years he has been an officer in the order; for the past seventeen years he has been the executive head of the Charlevoix county grange which is really the directing and nuifying agency for the sixteen subordinate granges in that county. In addition he has been master or overseer in one of the subordinates for the entire twenty-one years. He has declined to longer serve as the head of the county grange.

However, Ward will not be the only candidate for a place in the limelight on December 16th. W. S. Palmer of Kalkaska has announced that he will be here with 250 grangers from Kalkaska county. Arrangements are being made for a special train to bring the men and women that will try to let the world know that Kalkaska is on the map as well as Charlevoix and Traverse City.

Word has been received from the Wexford county grangers that they have some extra fine farm products which they desire to display in Traverse City at the time of the state grange meeting. They have been invited to forward the same.

FRUIT GROWERS ASSOCIATION

Effort Will be Made to Form County Organization.

The show at Chicago and the work done by the western Michigan Development Bureau this summer has made evident the need of a fruit growers association in this county, and Mr. Payton says that after the Traverse City exhibit is over he is going to devote his energies to the organization of a Charlevoix County Fruit Growers Association. All who are familiar with the energy that Payton puts into anything in which he is interested knows that it will be a success.

The advantages of such an association are too many to be enumerated. The members could by meeting together, keep up with the best methods of profitable fruit production; the marketing of our fruit could be put on a more systematic basis and the buying of new nursery stock could be done more advantageously.

All who are interested in the development of the fruit industry should get in communication with Mr. Payton.

HAVE CHANGED PLANS

Anti-Saloon League Will Fight for Local Option

In Township and Precincts at Next Legislative Session.

That the Anti-Saloon league proposes to make a vigorous fight for the extension of the local option principle to precincts and townships, is shown by the fact that it is sending out many pledge cards in which voters are asked to state that they will vote only for such legislative candidates as will vote for a law of this kind the next session.

The program is spoken of as new because it is a radical departure from what league leaders fought for in the session of 1909, though it was a part of their program at the session of 1905 and 1907, particularly the latter.

Last winter the leagers fought for the enactment of the search and seizures bill and in interviews and published statements said they were not for the local option principle except as applied in county units. They were said to feel that if extended to the smaller units it would result in nullifying the results of their efforts in many dry counties by making their leading towns wet. Cadillac Wexford county and Pontiac, Oakland county, were two of the cities particularly referred to at that time.

But it should not be understood that their extension program contemplates any abandonment of the county unit system. The county is to be the main unit as carefully explained by Supt. Morrow and the brewers need not worry over the unaccountability of the league plans, as a local paper says they are doing. Morrow was very careful to explain that the right of using the smaller unit was to be reserved, only to counties which have not already gone dry under the larger county unit system, and is not to be extended to the dry counties in order to make parts of them wet.

It seems probable that the only reason the drys did not fight for this during the last session was because they did not know their strength. Seeing that they were able to push through other stringent laws they have taken heart and will try the township local option plan in 1910.

Probably they will work along the lines of the bill presented by Senator Luke Lugers in 1907, which was closely modeled after the Ohio local option law. Senator Lugers did his best to put this bill through the year he was in the senate, but failed, to some extent because of the "boxer" fight of that year. The league hopes for better luck next time.

NEW STEEL STEAMER

Northern Michigan Transportation Company to Build One

The Only Drawback is the Lack of Proper Docking Facilities in Chicago

The proposed new palatial steamer for the Northern Michigan Transportation company referred to a short time ago in these columns is attracting a great deal of interest at the present time because the construction of the craft practically depends upon the provision of adequate docking facilities in Chicago. The company has plans prepared for a steamer to cost nearly a million dollars and stands ready to let the contract for its construction as soon as assurance is forthcoming that a pier will be built at which such a boat can be tied up without danger of wrecking it. The boat will be in commission sixteen months after it is known that the steamer can be docked at Chicago. A slip or sheltered basin at least 500 feet long and 120 feet wide is needed to accommodate a steamer of the dimensions proposed. There is no such basin available near the Chicago river mouth and the boat could not get up the river past the bridges.

Plans for a steel steamer 400 feet long and fifty feet wide to carry passengers exclusively have been prepared for the company by W. J. Wood, a Chicago naval designer. The boat will have a normal speed of twenty miles and a maximum speed of twenty-two miles an hour. It will have four passenger decks and sleeping accommodations for 700 passengers. It is intended to have the new steamer make three trips a week between Chicago, Charlevoix, Harbor Springs, Petoskey and Mackinac Island, supplementing the service of the Manitou. Every precaution to insure the comfort and safety of the passengers has been taken.

Steel construction as far as possible has been specified and the woodwork is to be made fireproof by chemical treatment. There will be thirty two private suites with parlor and bath, and every room will have hot and cold running water. The main dining room is planned to seat 255 persons at one time. Twin screws driven by quadruple expansion engines of 7,000 horse power will propel the boat. Twenty tons of coal an hour will be burned under the boilers. Accommodations for a crew of 250 are provided. The steamer will cost about $900,000 if it is built. The company is anxious to give the order for its construction, but —"no dock, no boat," is the way E. W. Seymour, general manager for the company, expresses it.—Ludington Chronicle.

ALL KINDS OF FRUIT IN GARDEN

View From Home Looks Over Beautiful Mediteranian Sea

Time Spent In Driving Over the Country From There—Miss Venstra will Visit Naples, Geneva, London, and Paris.

After we got to the shore we got a rig but before we could go home we had to wait until our trunks were all looked over and that was no small task as we had eleven trunks with us. Well it was just four o'clock that morning when we reached our home and when we did get there we couldn't get in as everything was locked up. All we could do was to wait for some one to let us in. At last we got in, went to bed and stayed there until ten o'clock then I got up to get some breakfast and couldn't find a thing but some coffee and a couple of crackers. We certainly had a great time the first week here, but are rested now and well and happy. The weather is like June and all the roses are in full bloom. We have a large house and big garden. Our place is about the size of a city block.

We have oranges, lemons, dates, figs, plums and bananas right in our garden and grapes as large as American plums. The fruit is great here. We have all we can eat and, Oh! it seems great to pick an orange off the tree.

We go driving two or three times a week and I wish you could see the beautiful country here. I never before saw anything like it. Every farm is like a garden with all kinds of fruit, and mountain after mountain. Our drives are so beautiful and the weather is so fine all the time that we just drive hour after hour. Our home stands on a high rock and we can overlook the sea and the city of Algeria, the most beautiful city I ever saw.

We expect to stay here about four months and then go to Naples, Genoa, and from there to London and Paris. While we are there I shall try and go to Holland. If I go there I shall go alone.

The Mediterranean sea is beautiful. We can see all the boats. Oh! I forgot to say I was sick three days. Sick! well I guess I was, I couldn't lift my head. I thought of Home, Sweet Home, but aside from these three days I was well and enjoyed my voyage every minute of the time.

I guess it will take this letter about two weeks to reach you. Good by. Write soon and tell me all the news.

OTSEGO COUNTY BANDITS

Rob E. G. Robbins of $150 Friday Afternoon, November 26.

Friday afternoon E. G. Robbins started to walk from Elmira to Camp 5. He had just been paid off at Elmira and had about $150 with him. While walking down the B. C. G. & A. railroad track two men jumped out from the bushes and attacked him. Mr. Robbins was knocked down and brutally assaulted so he lost consciousness. When he regained consciousness the two men were gone and so was his money. He went back to Elmira and phoned the sheriff at Gaylord, who immediately went on the trail of the bandits, whom Mr. Robins described as follows: One as very tall and slender with dark hair, the other short and thick set with sandy mustache and red hair. He thinks they went to Boyne Falls and took the G. R. & I. train south before he put the sheriff on their trail.

ONE MILLION DOLLARS FOR A GOOD STOMACH

This Offer Should be a Warning to Every Man and Woman

The newspapers and medical journals have had much to say relative to a famous millionaire's offer of a million dollars for a new stomach.

This great multi-millionaire was too busy to worry about the condition of his stomach. He allowed his dyspepsia to run from bad to worse until in the end it became incurable. His misfortune should serve as a warning to others. Every one who suffers with dyspepsia for a few years will give everything he owns for a new stomach.

Dyspepsia is caused by an abnormal state of the gastric juices. There is one element missing—Pepsin. The absence of this destroys the function of the gastric fluids. They lose their power to digest food.

We are now able to supply the pepsin in a form almost identical to that naturally created by the system when in normal health, so that it restores to the gastric juices their digestive power, and thus makes the stomach strong and well.

We want everyone troubled with indigestion and dyspepsia to come to our store and obtain a box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. They contain Bismuth-Subnitrate and Pepsin prepared by a process which develops their greatest power to overcome digestive disturbance.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are very pleasant to take. They soothe the irritable, weak stomach, strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, relieve nausea and indigestion, promote nutrition and bring about a feeling of comfort.

If you give Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets a reasonable trial, we will return your money if you are not satisfied with the result. Three sizes, 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store,—The Rexall Store. The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleisher.

Spiteful.

Clara—Nonsense! He didn't really mean it.

Kitty—Oh, yes, he did. But of course you know that Harry's taste in pictures isn't anything to brag about.

The Meanest Trick.

"It's strange, strange, strange, that I can't find a thing or keep a thing in this house," said Mr. Podmore the other day. "It's all because of your loose, slack, unsystematic way of keeping house, Mrs. Podmore!"

"What is it now, dear?"

"Don't dear me, but help me to find my hat. I hung it on the hall rack when I came in!"

"Why, Henry—"

"Don't stand there staring at me in that idiotic way, but help me to find that hat. I suppose I must wear my straw hat, and its raining like fury!"

"Henry Podmore, will you listen—"

"No, I'll not. When a man lays down his hat and can't find it—"

"Henry, that hat is on your head."

"What! Who put it there? This is some trick. I'd take my oath before any court in the land."

"Nonsense!"

"It's not nonsense! It's as true as that I live and stand before you, a tormented, worried, harassed man, who is ridiculed and made the victim of some mean, low trick in his own house every day. You'll hear more about this when I get home!"

Then he rushed out slamming the door after him.—Los Angeles Examiner.

Peach Marmalade.

Pare, stone and weigh the fruit. Extract the kernels from one fourth of the pits; cut them in small pieces and steep in one cupful of water for 15 minutes. Then strain and set away for use. Place the fruit in a preserving kettle and add three-fourths of a pound of granulated sugar for each pound of peaches. When well heated crush with a wooden potato masher. Boil for half an hour, stirring often, then add the water in which the kernels were steeped and the juice of one large lemon for each four pounds of fruit. Stir all together and cook slowly for half an hour longer, being very careful not to burn. When done put the marmalade in glasses or marmalade pots.

Creamed Cucumbers.

Peel two or three large cucumbers and cut very fine with a sharp knife or run through the coarsest knives of the meat chopper. Drain off liquid, but do not press.

Rub a bowl with a clove of garlic, put in minced cucumbers and season with cayenne pepper, black pepper, salt, a teaspoonful of onion juice and the strained juice of half a small lemon.

Chill all the ingredients thoroughly, and just before serving stir in half a cupful of thickly whipped cream.

This makes a nice sauce for serving with fish or is equally good put on the half shells. Serve one to each person and pass with soft-shell crabs or broiled lobster at a luncheon.

Those Stage "College Boys."

The west has recently been flooded, I hear, with "college boy" acts—teams of not overly brilliant young men who wear $15 white flannel hand-me-downs, hats of a style mostly favored by colored gentlemen, sing last year's ballads very poorly and dance with indifferent success. One disgusted manager, whose booking agent had been sending him an oversupply of the teams, stood in the lobby watching one of the "college boys" talking with a mash he had picked up in the town.

"Say," said the girl, "are you fellows really college boys?"

"Well," answered the other, "I ain't one but Bill is. Why, Bill," with pride, "he graduated from the Barbers' college in Los Angeles."—Beau Broadway in New York Telegraph.

Literary Notes

Woman's Home Companion for December.

The artistic features of this issue are striking. A full-page painting of the Madonn by Louise Cox, a delightful full-page Child Painting in colors by Jessie Willcox Smith, two pages of profusely illustrated humorous verse by James Whitcomb Riley, and an amusing story in pictures, "Their Christmas Visit Home."

There is good Christmassy fiction in this issue by Myra Kelly, Zona Gale, Hulbert Footner and John D. Barry. There is a serial by Katharine Holland Brown, and a detective story by Anna Katharine Green, which proves once more this writer's genius for novel and intricate plots.

The glamour that surrounds all queens is particularly strong about the supposedly romantic Queen of Italy. That glamour fades away before the trenchant pen of Kellogg Durland, who calls her the most unpopular queen of Europe.

Cincinnati is a happy city—according to Woman's Home Companion. Investigators have gone there to live, and they tell in this Christmas issue why Cincinnati is a fine American city. This is the second of a series of articles on American cities, and is in vivid contrast to last month's article on Pittsburg.

Lyman Abbott has a Christmas talk and there are more of Edward Everett Hale's Reminiscences.

This issue is essentially a Christmas one, and is filled with new ideas for Christmas presents, Christmas embroidery, Christmas decorations, Christmas festivities and Christmas cooking.

The regular departments appear as usual, but most of these are bigger than in any other month.

Their Only Pleasure.

An interesting light on the menial condition of natives of New Guinea is afforded by the story of a commissioner recounted in the report of the London Missionary society. The commissioner tried two men from the mountains for throwing spears at the police. They pleaded guilty, and it was explained to them that they must never do it again.

To the commissioner's surprise they both asked to be hanged. When asked the reason of the request they replied that the only pleasure they had was throwing spears at the police, and as they were forbidden to do it any more they did not want to live.—London Mail.

Inquiries from the prosecuting attorneys in different parts of the state regarding the Warner-Crampton liquor law have caused Attorney General Bird to make a closer investigation into the technicalities of the act passed at the last session. He finds that in amending the old law, the new acts makes no provision whereby a saloon keeper may move his saloon from one location to another.

The old law provided for a new bond, but this clause is stricken out of the Warner-Crampton act and the saloon man who wants to move or is forced to do so will have to procure a new license.

Another opinion is that physicians cannot enter the business of selling liquor in local option counties, but may only administer liquor in good faith for medical purposes to their patients, neither may druggists accept the prescriptions of osteopaths for liquor.

The Prescott Progress says: That almost 9,000 sheep which were shipped here last June by Prescott, Bradley & Co., and summered on their Styles Lake Ranch, are now being taken from the range, the lamba being sorted from the ewes for shipment to the market, and the ewes prepared for winter

Mr. Gage informs us that the sheep have made highly satisfactory gain since being brought here and are in excellent shape for the market. The ewes will be retained for breeding purposes and Messrs. Prescott and Gage will next week go to Canada to purchase a carload of sires.

Mr Gage is thoroughly convinced that there is not a better sheep country to be found than Northern Michigan and says his faith has been greatly strengthened by the fact that while looking after the sheep this fall that fifteen head of sheep have been found that were lost from those summered on the range two years ago, and although they have ran wild since then and spent two winters on, the range without care they are as fat as seals.

Western Michigan nurserymen report an unprecedented sale of young apple trees and indications point to the fact that the immediate future will witness a large and steady development of commercial apple raising in the famous fruit belt, extending through several counties.

John Caldwell, who has been engaged in farming near Cadillac for a number of years is credited with the following statement: "People who come into this country looking for homes are not taking any chances, for there are well improved farms in the midst and all around the unimproved stump lands. I can cite you several farmers who have obtained in net profit on potatoes from $30 to $100 per acre yearly, three years out of five. I have neighbors who boast of clearing above all expense, $40 per acre on sugar beets. Now I am satisfied that there is no better locality in the United States for a man of moderate means to make a home than right here in northern Michigan for the reasons that we have a fine healthy climate, pure water and never fail to grow good crops.

The station agent at Fife Lake, will eat beefsteak, as usual, this year. He planned to hunt in the northern peninsula with some friends and went a few days before the season opened to prepare a camp. A deer tried to bite him one day, and he could not resist the temptation to shoot it. Then along came a game warden, found him with the goods on, and a $50 fine followed, also the revocation of his license, and he came home wiser, but madder than a wet hen. It pays to be "Johnny on the spot" as a general thing but one can be too premature, so to speak.

During the calendar year of 1908 there were 10,952 births registered in western Michigan, and during the same period there were but 6,578 deaths recorded. This is an excess of births over deaths of 3,075. This means a gain in population of 40,000 every ten years from births alone. Western Michigan has a low death rate because of a favored climatic conditions, and because of its good drainage by means of the many rivers that cross the territory and because of the intelligence of the inhabitants.

That Picture of Abraham Lincoln

Editor Charlevoix COURIER:—In our recent and victorious "local option" campaign, the name of that great, illustrious and forever-to-be remembered Abraham Lincoln, was associated with and used to bolster up sentiment in favor of the liquor interests. The following from a paper published in Columbia, South Carolina, nails the use of his name and influence as a most flagrant mis-representation of the truth and facts, with reference to his temperance sentiments:

"By his herculean efforts to corral the "legalized outlaw," Lincoln rendered yeoman service, and his first printed paper was a plea for the temperance cause.

In the year of 1854-5 Mr. Lincoln conjointly with Major James B. Mervin canvassed Illinois in the interest of state prohibition, using nearly the same language, and in many instances the same illustrations that he used later in his arguments against slavery.—During his canvass Lincoln uttered the following fearless declaration against the Hydia Headed Monster: "The saloon and the liquor traffic have defenders but no defense! This legalized liquor traffic, as carried on in the saloon and grog-shops, is the tragedy of civilization. Good citizenship demands and requires that what is right should not only be made known but be made permanent; That what is evil should not only be detected and defeated, but destroyed. The saloon has proved itself to be the greatest foe, the most blighting curse of our modern civilization: And this is why I am a practical Prohibitionist. We must not be satisfied until the public sentiment of this state and the individual consciousness shall be instructed to look upon the saloon keeper and liquor seller, with all the license each can give him, as simple and only a privileged malefactor, a criminal." Shortly before he himself passed over the great divide, the Hon. Elihu B. Washburn wrote that "When the whole truth is disclosed of Mr. Lincoln's life, during the years of 1854-55, it will throw a flood of new light on the character of Mr. Lincoln, and will add a new lustre to his greatness and patriotism." Only eight hours before the assassin "fired the shot heard round the world," our martyr-chief made this memorable pronouncement: "After reconstruction, the next great question will be the overthrow of the liquor traffic."—A. Lincoln (Bristol) —National Advocate.

Charlevoix Has to Bow to the Inevitable—Scores of Endorsements Prove It

After reading the public statement of this fellow-sufferer given below, you must come to this conclusion: A remedy which cured years ago, which has kept the kidneys in good health since, can be relied upon to perform the same work in other cases. Read this:

Mrs. G. Wikel, 303 S. Elmwood Ave., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Kidney complaint clung to me for a long time and made my life miserable. My limbs and joints were sore and I had all the aches and pains that generally accompany a bad case of kidney trouble. Finally after trying several prescriptions and remedies without being helped to any extent, I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They benefited me, at once and before long had effected a complete cure. I know from experience that Doan's Kidney Pills act just as represented."

THE RELIEF PROVED PERMANENT.

On August 6, 1909, Mrs. Wikel was interviewed and she added to the above: "I have had no occasion to take a kidney remedy since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me. You are at liberty to continue the publication of the testimonial I have previously given in their favor."

A PROMINENT citizen called our attention the other day to the fact that much valuable city property was left exposed to the weather, which was wearing it out faster than years of service. A very little money expended in the erection of a rough shed for the housing of the machinery needed in our highway improvements, would be the best possible expenditure of money.

The city is not alone careless in this respect. All over the county do we see public property standing out all winter, and, we are sorry to say, we also on many farms see valuable farm implements which has caused the owner many days of toil and nights of worry to secure, being worn out more in one winter's exposure than in five season's work.

NEXT April the people of Charlevoix county, will have the opportunity of saying, by their votes whether or no they wish to nominate candidates for county offices by direct vote. We believe they do and will say so by an overwhelming majority. We believe also that they will turn out to the September primary and that the tickets placed before the voters next fall will represent the choice of the people freely expressed, which will be a source of great satisfaction, not only to the candidates themselves, but, to all citizens who believe that the people can always be trusted.

STATE BAR ASSOCIATION

Will Probably Hold Mid-summer Meeting in in this City.

Monday afternoon at a meeting of the Charlevoix County Bar Association it was decided to invite the State Bar Association to hold their mid-summer meeting in this city, assurances having been received that such an invitation would be favorably considered.

Hon. J. M. Harris, of Boyne City, A. B. Nicholas, of East Jordan, and R. W. Kane of Charlevoix, with Judge Mayne as an ex-officio member were appointed a committee to extend such invitation and make arrangements for the entertainment and report at the next meeting of the association in February.

Adds $15,000,000 Taxable Property.

Secretary George Lord, of the state tax commission, estimates that approximately $15,000,000 in taxable property will be added to the assessment rolls of the state by the last legislature, when they created an act placing telegraph and telephone companies doing business in Michigan under the ad valorem system of taxation.

While these figures are not final, it is estimated that the rate per $1,000 on this assessment will be about $18 00 this year, which means that the state will secure $270,000 in taxes from these companies. The tentative assessment will be made next January.

Under the specific tax system the state assessed telephone and telegraph companies $118,953.86 last year, or less than half the probable amount this year. Of this amount of specific taxes, the Western Union paid $2,089 64; the Postal, $706 93; the Bell Telephone, $98,134, while the Citizens' of Grand Rapids, was assessed $18,023.29, which it has not paid up to date.

A NATIONAL AFFAIR

Boyvilles Being Established all Over the Country

Which will be Supplementary to our National Boy City.

Monday night there gathered in the Towle opera house of Hammond, Indiana, a great crowd that taxed the capacity of the house. It was the inaugurating of the Mayor of Hammond Boyville, which has been organized by Mr. Chas. Hahn, the associate of Judge Brown, and under the auspices of the Men's club of the city. Congressman Ed. D. Crumpacker of Indiana and Judge Willis Brown were the guests. Elliott Conroy, the new mayor, delivered a remarkable address, as did Leslie Bowers. The Hammond papers give a very lengthy illustrated report of this movement, which for the past two weeks has been the one topic of interest in that city.

The Boyvilles are patterned after Boy City. In Hammond everyone of the eleven public schools is a city ward with its alderman, as the schools are enlisted. Boyville comprises all the boys between the ages of ten and seventeen years. Plans are already under way for a city hall for Boyville in Hammond.

Jackson, Michigan, also has a Boyville conducted by the Y. M. C. A. This plan makes every Sunday school a ward. The results as reported by Mr. Stanley, who had charge of the Jackson ward in Boy City last summer, show that it has doubled the attendance of boys in the Sunday schools and brought up the moral tone of the boys in the city.

As a result of Judge Brown's lectures on the City of Boys in the east, Yonkers, New York, Providence, Rhode Island and Dover and Berlin, New Hampshire, are inaugurating Boyvilles. These are encompassing the boys in the public schools.

Mr. Edward E. Webb, the traveling representative of Boy City in Michigan, Indiana, Ohio and Illinois, has arranged for Judge Brown and Mr. Hahn to visit and inaugurate over twenty Boyvilles. Through Collier's Weekly a plan has been devised which will enable these Boyvilles to have their own municipal building or city hall.

With the parent Boy City at Charlevoix and the place where, every summer, these Boyvilles meet and get in the game, it seems, indeed, a country-wide movement which is mighty good for Charlevoix. We know that Judge Brown's plans are to have a permanent Boy City the year around and to develop the Charlevoix Boy City into one of the most efficient, unique and sane systems of education yet devised for boys.

Bran New Stock of Cutters and Sleighs on Hand

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. I also handle all kinds of farm implements. I have the agency for the Superior drill, the best drill ever sold in Charlevoix. Remember the old stand. First-class horseshoeing and general repairing.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE JOY OF TEMPTATION.

THERE was but little sleep in the chateau that night. The charity ball was forgotten or, if recalled at all, only in connection with the thought of what it came so near to costing its promoters.

No further disturbances occurred. A strict watch was preserved; the picturesque drawbridge was lifted, and there were lights on the terrace and galleries; men slept within easy reach of their weapons. The siege had begun in earnest. Men had been slain, and their blood was crying out for vengeance; the voice of justice was lost in the clamorings of rage.

The princess was quite serene. She lightly announced that the present state of affairs was no worse than that which she was accustomed to at home. The court of Rapp-Thorberg was ever in a state of unrest, despite its outward suggestion of security. Outbreaks were common among the masses. Somehow they were suppressed before they grew large enough to be noticed by the wide world.

"We invariably come out on top," she philosophized, "and so shall we here. At home we always eat, drink and make merry, for tomorrow never comes."

Soon after breakfast was over Chase announced his intention to visit each of the gates in turn. The princess strolled with him as far as the bridge at the foot of the terrace. They stopped in the shade of a clump of trees that hung upon the edge of the stream. As they were gravely discussing the events of the night Neenah came up to them from beyond the bridge. She salaamed gracefully to the "sahib." She had no eyes for royalty.

"'Excellency,'" she began breathlessly, "it is Selim who would have private speech with the most gracious sahib. It is to be quick, excellency. Selim is under the ground, excellency."

"In the cellars?"

"Yes, excellency. It is so dark there that one cannot see, but Neenah will lead you. Selim has sent me. But come now!"

Chase felt his ears burn when he turned to find a delicate, significant smile on Genevra's lips. "Don't let me detain you," she said, ever so politely.

"Wait, please!" he exclaimed. "Is Selim hurt?" he demanded of Neenah, who shook her head vigorously.

"Then there is no reason why you should not accompany us, princess."

"I am not at all necessary to the undertaking," she said coldly, turning to leave him.

"Selim has found fuses and gunpowder laid in the cellars, excellency—in the secret vaults," began Neenah eagerly, divining the cause of the white lady's hesitation.

This astounding piece of news swept away the feeble barrier Genevra would have erected in her pique. She consented to accompany Chase into the cellars, a spirit of adventure overcoming certain scruples which might have restrained her under other conditions.

Neenah led them through the wine cellars and down into the vaults beyond the dungeons. The princess clutched Chase's hand tightly as they stole through the bleak, chill corridor. She found herself wondering if the girl was to be trusted. What if she were leading them into a trap? She would have whispered her fears into Chase's ear had not a sharp "Sh!" come from the girl who was leading. Genevra felt a queer little throb of hatred for the girl—she could not explain it.

The dungeon was off to the right. They could hear the insistent murmur of voices, with now and then a laugh from the distant cells. The guard could be heard scolding at his charges. With a caution that seemed wholly absurd to the two white people, Neenah guided them through the maze of narrow passages, dark as Erebus and chill as the grave. Chase checked a hysterical impulse to laugh aloud at the proceedings. It was like playing at a children's game.

He was walking between the two women, Neenah ahead, Genevra behind. Each clasped one of his hands. Suddenly he found himself experiencing an overpowering desire to exert the strength of his arm to draw the princess close—close to his insistent body. The touch of her flesh, the clutch of her cold little hand, filled him with the most exquisite sense of possession. The magnetism of life charged from one to the other, striking fire to the blood. He was forgetting Neenah, forgetting himself, thinking only of the opportunity and its fascination. In another instant he would have drawn her hand to his lips. Neenah came to a standstill and uttered a warning whisper. Chase recovered himself with a mighty start, as did as of one awaking in unseen peril sweeping over him. Genevra heard the sharp, painful intake of his breath and felt the sudden relaxation of his fingers. She was not puzzled. She, too, had felt the magic of the touch, and her blood was surging red. She knew then that she had been clasping his hand with a fervor that was as unmistakable as it was shameless.

Neenah may have felt the magnetic current that coursed through these surcharged creatures. She was smiling mysteriously to herself.

"Wait here," she whispered to Chase, ever so softly. She released his hand and moved off in the blackness of the passage. "I will bring Selim," came back to them.

"Oh!" fell faintly, tremulously, from Genevra's lips. It was a trap, after all! But it was not the trap laid by a traitor. She fell all aquiver. Her heart fluttered violently; her breath came quickly. Alone with him, and their blood leaping to the touch that thrilled!

Chase could no more have restrained the hand that went out suddenly in quest of hers than he could have checked his own heart throbs. A wave of exquisite joy swept over him—the joy of a temptation that knew no fear, no conscience. He found her cold little hand and clasped it in tense fingers—fingers that throbbed with the call to passion. He drew her close; their bodies touched and sweetly trembled.

"Are you afraid?" he whispered in tones he had never heard before.

"Yes," she murmured convulsively—"of you! Please, please, don't!" At the same time she tightened her clutch upon his hand and crept closer to him, governed by an unconquerable craving. Chase had the sensation of smotherling. He could not believe the senses which told him that she was responding to his appeal.

"Genevra!" he murmured, almost gasped, in his delirium. His arms went about her slender figure suddenly, and she was strained to his breast, locked to him with bonds that seemed unbreakable. Her face was lifted to his. The blackness of the passage was impenetrable, but love was the guide. He found her lips in one wild, glorious kiss.

A door creaked sharply. He released her. Their quivering arms fell away. They drew ever so slightly apart, still under the control of the influence which had held them for that brief moment. She was trembling violently. A soft, wailing sigh as of pain came from her lips.

Then the glimmer of a light came to them through the half open door at the end of the passage. They gazed at it without comprehension, dumb in their sudden weakness. A shadowy figure came out through the door, and Selim's voice, low and tense, called to them.

"Forgive me," he murmured.

"It is too late," she replied. Then his hand sought hers again, and, dizzy with emotion, he led her up to the open door. As they passed into the huge, dimly lighted chamber he turned to look into her face. She met his gaze, and there were tears in her eyes. Selim was ahead of them. She shook her head sadly, and he understood.

"Can we ever forget?" she murmured plaintively.

"Never!" he whispered.

"Then we shall always regret—always regret!" she said, withdrawing her hand. "It was the beginning and the end."

"Not the end, dearest one—if we are always to regret," he interposed eagerly. "But why the end? You do love me! I know it! And I worship you—oh, you don't know how I worship you, Genevra! I"—

"Hush! We were fools! Don't, please! I do not love you. I was carried away by— Oh, can't you understand? Remember what I am! You knew and yet you have degraded me in my own eyes. Is my own self respect nothing? You will laugh and you may boast after I am married to"—

"Genevra!" he protested as if in great pain.

"Excellency," came from the lips of Selim at the lower end of the chamber, breaking in sharply upon their little world, "there is no time to be lost." Time to be lost? And he had held her in his arms! Time to be lost! All the rest of time was to be lost! "They may return at any moment."

Chase pulled himself together. He looked into her eyes for a moment, finding nothing there but a command to go. She stood straight and unyielding on the very spot which had seen her trembling with emotion but a moment before.

"Coming, Selim," he said, and moved away from her side as Neenah came toward them from the opposite wall. Genevra did not move. She stood quite still and mute, watching his tall figure crossing the stone floor. Ah, was it a man he was! The little Persian wife of Selim, after waiting for a full minute, gently touched the arm of the princess. Genevra started and looked down into the dark, accusing, smiling eyes. She flushed deeply and hated herself.

"Shall we go back?" she asked nervously. "I—I have seen enough. Come, Neenah. Lead me back to"—

"Most glorious excellency," said Neenah, shaking her pretty head, "we are to wait here. The sahib and Selim will join us soon."

"Where are they going?" demanded the princess, a feeling of awe coming over her. "I don't want to be left here alone." Chase and Selim had opened a low, heavy iron door at the lower end and were peering into the darkness beyond.

"Selim will explain. He has learned much. It is the secret passage to the coast. Be not afraid."

Genevra looked about her for the first time. They were standing in a long, low room, the walls of which reeked with dampness and gave out a noxious odor. A single electric light provided a faint, almost unnatural light. Selim raised a lighted lantern as he led Chase through the squat door. Behind Genevra were enormous casks, a dozen or more, reaching almost to the ceiling. A number of boxes stood close by, while on the opposite side of the chamber four small iron chests were to be seen, dragged out from recesses in the distant corner. Observing her look of wonder, Neenah vouchsafed a casual explanation.

"It is the wine cellar and the storeroom. The iron chests contain the silver and gold plate that came from the great rajah of Murpat in exchange for the five huge rubies which now adorn his crown. The old sahibs stored the chests here many years ago, but few know of their existence. See! They were hidden in the walls over there. Von Blitz has found them."

"Von Blitz!" in amazement.

"He has been here. He has carried away many chests. There were twenty in all."

"And—and he will return for these?" queried the princess in alarm.

"Assuredly, most glorious one. Soon, perhaps. But be not afraid. Selim can close the passage door. He cannot get in. He will be fooled, eh? Why should you be afraid? Have you not with you the most wonderful, the most brave sahib? Would he not give his life for you?" The dark eyes sparkled with understanding—aye, even mischief. Genevra felt that this oriental witch knew everything. For a long time she looked in uncertain mood upon that smiling, wistful face. Then she said softly, moved by an irresistible impulse to confess something, even obscurely:

"Oh, if only I were such as you, Neenah, and could live forever on this dear island!"

"But, most high, there are no princes here. There is no one to whom the most gracious one could be sold. No one who could pay more than a dozen rubies. Women are cheap here, and you would be a woman, not a most beautiful princess."

"I would not care to be a princess, perhaps."

"You love my Sahib Chase?" demanded Neenah abruptly, eagerly.

"Neenah!" gasped Genevra, with a startled look. Neenah looked intently into the unsteady, blue gray eyes and then bent over to kiss the hand of the princess. The latter laughed almost aloud in her confusion. She caught herself up quickly and said with some asperity: "You foolish child, I am to become a prince's wife. How can I love your sahib? What nonsense! I am to marry a prince, and he is not to pay for me in rubies."

"Ah, how wonderful!" cried Neenah, with ravishing candor. "A prince for a husband and the glorious Sahib Chase for a lover all your life! Ah!" The exclamation was no less than a sigh of rapturous inforsement.

Jacob von Blitz stepped into the light.

The princess stared at her first in consternation, then in dismay. Before she could find words to combat this alarming prophecy, so ingeniously presented to her reflections, Selim and Hollingsworth Chase returned to the chamber. She was distressed, even confounded, to find that she was staring at Chase with a strange, abashed curiosity growing in her eyes—a stare that she suddenly was afraid he might observe and appreciate. A wave of revulsion, of shame, spread over her whole being.

With the swiftness of lightning she recalled the things that had been told of more than one grand dame in Europe, aye, of women at her own court. Even a princess she had known who—but for shame! she cried at her heart parled for retort to this truculent estimate, but he controlled himself.

"Yes, it is dangerous here," he said quietly, answering her question. "As soon as Selim bars that door upon the inside we'll go. I was a fool to bring you here."

"How could you know what the daugers would be?" she asked.

"I'll confess I didn't expect Von Blitz," he said dryly.

"But you did expect"— she began, with a start, biting her lips.

"There's a vast difference between expectation and hope, priacess." Neenah had joined Selim at the door when the men re-entered the chamber. Now she was approaching with her husband.

"May Allah bless you and profit for himself, excellencies," said the good Selim. Neeash pisiaiy had advanced her suspicioas to the brown body servant. Genevra blushed, and thea her eyes blazed. She gave the girl a scoraful look. Neeaah smiled happily, uureservedly, in return.

"Allah help us, you should say, if Von Blitz returns," interposed Chase hastily. "Is the door barred?"

"No, excelleuey. The bars have sprung. I cannot drop them in place. As you know, the lock has been blown away. The charge sprung the bolts. We must go ut ouce."

"Then there is uo way to keep them out of the chateau?" cried Genevra anxiously.

"They can go no farther than this room," explained Selim. "We lock the double iron doors from the other side—the door through which you came, most glorious excellency—and they cannot enter the cellars above. This is the chamber which opens into the uudergrouud passage to the coast. The passage was made for escape from the chateau in case of trouble and was known to but few. My father was the servant of Sahib Wyckholme, and I used to live in the chateau.

"Once there was a boat, a launch, which lay hidden below the cliffs on the north coast. The passage led to this boat. It was always ready to put out to sea. But one night it was destroyed by the great rocks which fell from the cliffs in an earthquake. When I came here I at once thought of the passage. Yon will see that the doors into the cellar cannot be opened from this chamber. The locks and bolts are on the other side. I knew where the keys were hidden. It was easy to unlock the doors and come into this room. I found that some one had been here before me. The door to the passage had been forced open from without, cracked by dynamite. Many of the treasure boxes have been removed. Von Blitz was here not an hour ago. He wears boots. I saw the footprints among the naked ones in the passage. They will come back for the other chests. Then they will blow up the passageway with powder, and escape from the chateau through it will be cut off. I have found the kegs of powder in the passage and have destroyed the fuses. It will be of no avail, sahib. They will blow it up at the other end, which will be just the same."

"There's no time to be lost," cried Chase. "We must bring enough men down here to capture them when they return—shoot 'em if necessary. Come on! We can surprise them if we hurry."

They were starting across the chamber toward the door when a gruff, sepulchral oath came rolling up to the chamber through the secret passage. Quick as a flash Selim, who realized that they could not reach and open the door leading to the stairs, turned in among the huge wine casks, first blinding his lantern. He whispered for the others to follow. In a moment they were squeezing themselves through the narrow spaces between the dark, strong smelling casks, back into a darkness so opaque that it seemed lifeless.

"They won't suspect that we are here," whispered Selim as the door to the passage creaked. "Keep quiet! Don't breathe!"

The single electric light was still burning as Selim had found it when he first came. The door swung open slowly, heavily, and Jacob Von Blitz, mud covered, reeking with perspiration and panting savagely, stepped into the light. Behind him came a man with a lantern and behind him two others.

They were white men, all. Von Blitz turned suddenly and cursed the man with the lantern. The fellow was ready to drop with exhaustion. Evidently it had been no easy task to remove the chests.

CHAPTER XXII.

SEVERAL PHILOSOPHERS.

THE four burly men sat down upon the chests, Von Blitz alone being visible to the watchers. They were fagged to the last extreme.

"Dis is der last," panted Von Blitz, blowing hard and stretching his big arms. "I fix him," he growled. "His time vill come, by taun! I let him know he can't take my vives avay mit him. Der dog! I fix him some day purdy soon. Und dem tam vimmens! Dey run svay mit him, eh? Ach, Gott, if I could only put my hands by deir necks yet!"

"Vat for you fret, Yacob?" growled one of the Boers. "You couldn't take dose vimmens back by Europe mit you. I tink you got goot luck by losing dem. Misder Chase can't take dem back needer. Don't fret."

"Vell," said Von Blitz, arising, "come on, boys. Dis is der last of dem. Den ve blow der tam t'ing up. Grab hold dere, Joost. Up mit it, Jan. Vat? No?"

"Gott in himmel, Yacob, valt a minutes! My back is proke!" protested Joost stubbornly. Von Blitz swore steadily for a minute, but could not move the impassive Boers.

"Vat for you tink I vant you in on dis, you svine? To set arouudt uud dream? Nobody else kuows about dis treasures, und ve got it all for ourselves—ve four und no more, und you say, 'Vat's der hurry?' It's all ours. Ve divide it oop in der cave mit all der money ve get from der bank. Vat? Yes? Den, ven der time comes, ve send it all by Australia und no von is der viser. Der natives won't know, und der white peebles vou't be alive to care aboudt it."

"I don't like dot scheme to rob der bank," growled Jan. "If der peeples get on to us, dey vould cut us to bieces."

"But dey won't get on to us, you fool. Dey vouldn't take it demselves if it vas handed to dem. Dey're too honest—yes. Vell, don't dey say ve're honest too? Vell, vat more you vaat? Dey don't know how much money und rubies dere is in der bank. Ve won't take all of it—uad dey won't know der differeace. Ve burn der books. Das is all. Ve get in by der bank tonight, boys."

"I don't like id," said Joost. "Id's stealing from our freuads, Yacob. Besides, if der oder heirs should go before der government mit der story, vat den?"

"Der oder heirs vill never get der chance, boys. Dey vill die mit der plague—ha, ha! Sure! Dere von't be uo oder heirs. Rasula says it must be so. Ve can'd valt, boys. It vill be years before der business is settled. Ve must get vat ve can now and valt for der decision afterwards. Brodney has wrote to Rasula, saying dat dot Chase feller is to stay here vedder ve vant him or not. He says Chase is a goot man! By tam, it makes me cry to t'ink of vot he has done by me—dot goot man!"

To the amazement of all the hurly German began to blubber.

"Come on, Yacob," said Jan gruffly.

Von Blitz shook his fist at the door across the chamber and thundered his final maledictions.

"Sir John says in der letter to Misder Chase dere is a movements on foot in London to settle der contest out of court," volunteered Joost.

"Sure, but he also say dat ve all may die mit old age before it is over yet."

"Don't forget der plague!" said Jan.

They groaned mightily as they lifted the heavy chests to their shoulders and started for the door.

"Close der door, Jan," commanded Von Blitz from the passage. "Ve vill light der fuse vet ve haf got beyond der first bend. Vat? Look! By tam, vou of ye i swine has broke der fuse Valt! Ve vill fix him now."

The door was closed behind them but the listeners could hear them repairing the damage that Selim had done to the fuse.

His Question.

Near the approach of the final examinations a few years ago one of the law professors was cautioning his class against neglecting a thorough review of the semester's work and pointing out in a general way what the examination would cover. "I'll pause now to answer any questions," the professor added, "and then I must go to prepare the examination papers and hurry them to the printer."

Nobody had any question for a moment, and then a solemn, thoughtful looking student in the rear of the room arose and signified his desire to ask something.

Says he, "If I may ask, who is the printer?"—Cleveland Leader.

The Blood in the Brain.

Too much blood in the brain is a frequent cause of headaches. Pains are felt all over the head the face becomes flushed, the temples throb and strong light or noise causes excruciating pain. In cases of this kind the sufferer should be careful in diet and should not eat meat oftener than once a day.

Too little blood in the brain is another cause of headache. It is recognized by dizziness, noises in the ears and pains on the top of the head. The best stimulant is a cup of strong tea or coffee or a bowl of soup. People who suffer with these headaches should sleep with their heads low.—London Strand Magazine.

The Dollar Sign.

When it came time for Mrs. Bluffer to pack her trunk and depart from the resort where she had spent many pleasant days, where she had been the cynosure of all eyes, where she had flirted and gossiped (and been gossiped about), she visited the proprietor.

"I've just received a check for $50 from my husband," she told him. "You will honor it, won't you?"

The proprietor bowed and smiled.

"My dear Mrs. Bluffer," he ventured, "I will not only honor it, but will fall down and worship it."—Philadelphia Ledger.

FROM FOREST TO FOOT.

THE MAKING OF RUBBERS AN INTERESTING PROCESS.

If Charles Goodyear were alive today he could discover nothing connected with his invention in which so great an improvement has been made as in the manufacture of rubber shoes of the best quality. In shape, durability and comfort there is no comparison between those experimented on by him and those which are now shipped to every city, town and village in the United States and to all parts of the world by the Wales Goodyear Shoe Co. The most dainty Parisian fashions in footwear are reproduced in rubber with such perfection that the material has the appearance of the finest patent leather.

The making of a rubber shoe is not the commonplace affair that might be supposed. It takes "nine men to make a pin," they say, but to make a rubber shoe it requires many more.

Few realize the number of operations necessary to produce, from the crude rubber biscuit, the highly finished rubber shoe of today.

Briefly, the various steps may be described as, washing, drying, compounding, calendering, cutting, making, varnishing, vulcanizing, and packing, and under each of these heads innumerable minor operations are performed.

The Grinding and Calendering Department is the one in which the crude rubber as it comes from the forest is washed, refined and prepared for mixing.

It is impossible to make out of rubber alone, shoes that will stand extreme changes in temperature. After refining and mixing the mass, the calenders run the rubber into sheets, press the special designs and markings and corrugations into the parts which form the soles.

By hand and by powerful stamps the various pieces that compose a rubber are then cut out and sent to the making room, where they are fitted together by deft hands, in such a way that all joints and seams are covered.

The varnishing, vulcanizing and inspection of each rubber comes next before the finished rubber is ready for shipment to the retailer.

This is only a hurried and brief sketch of the various operations which at every stage requires skilled labor, scientific supervision and the use of the highest grade material.

There are rubber shoes and rubber shoes, of course, but the rubber shoe that looks well and wears well is the result of not only the most conscientious labor and long experience, but of the investment of enormous capital. Such a rubber is that of the Wales Goodyear Shoe Co. This great concern makes over forty thousand pairs of rubber boots and shoes daily.

Besides this he fed to his hogs a large quantity, and gave away several wagon loads. The fact that he was unable to secure help in picking lost him considerable first quality fruit which was blown off the trees, and which he was unable to sort and clean into marketable shape without help. The orchard was sprayed three times. The total expenditure for help in picking was only $100. Mr. Harwood estimates his total crop at about 1,000 bushels.—Central Lake Torch.

Only two weeks more and it will be Charlevoix Day in Traverse City. Are you planning to be there? Of course you are, if not, get in line at once, don't let any excuse or reason prevent your attendance. Tell your friends and neighbors that they must go. Everybody must go and shout the praises of Charlevoix county. The eyes of the state are upon us. We've got to make good.

Brother Payton and his committee are hustling in the exhibits to show that Charlevoix county produces the best there is in Northern Michigan. Other counties are hustling too. Send along your exhibits. Get them in. Brother Ward has the transportation problem well in hand and your Grange officers have received their official notice of train time, rate, etc. Pomona will meet in special session Saturday night at Ironton to confer the fifth degree which you must have to fully enjoy the day. Let the watchword from now on be, "I'm going to Traverse."

The Constable's Complaint.

A police constable was found on the roadside in an insensible condition and apparently delirious, for he muttered incessantly, "I ate one too." "He has evidently been poisoned," said the doctor as he listened to the rambling sentence. "I'll try the stomach pump on him." This instrument brought the dazed constable to his senses, but he kicked the pump to the other end of the room. "What do you mean by this?" he cried. "I thought you were poisoned!" exclaimed the doctor. "You kept on saying 'I ate one too.'" "You are a lot of idiots!" grunted the constable wrathfully. "That's the number of the car that knocked me over—1812!"—London Mail.

"What's that you call your mule?" "I calls him Corporation," answered the old colored man. "How did you come to give him such a name?" "F'um studyin' de animal an' readin' de papers. Dat mule gits mo' laigue an' abuse dan anything else in de township an' goes ahead havin' his own way jes' de same."—Washington Star.

JOKE TURNED ON FREDERICK

How the King of Prussia Was Outwitted by the Cleverness of a Courtier.

It is related of Frederick the Second, king of Prussia, that he one day made a present of a golden snuff box to one of his courts. When the latter opened the lid he found the picture of an ass painted upon the under side of it. Though he scarcely relished the king's joke, he said nothing at the time, but as soon as he quitted the king's presence, he sent one of his valets with the snuff box to the city, and gave instructions that the picture of the ass was to be painted out, and a portrait of the king put in its place.

A few days later a distinguished company dined with the king. The count was one of the guests, and after a time he produced his snuff box and pretended to examine it with the air of a man who was proud to have received such a gift from the king. The latter, wishing to enjoy a little amusement at the count's expense, mentioned to the duchess of Brunswick that he had made a present of the box to the count on the preceding day. She desired to inspect it, and when the box was handed to her she opened the lid, and looking inside, cried in raptures: "Perfect! The likeness is charming. It is one of the best portraits of you that I have ever seen."

She handed the box to the person next to her, who was equally charmed with the likeness. From one to another the box was passed, and all testified to the excellent resemblance which the picture bore to the king. The king, thinking that the ass' head was still to be seen on the snuff box, felt exceedingly embarrassed; but at last the snuff box, having made the tour of the table, came to his hands, and the first glance showed him how cleverly the count had anticipated his little joke and turned it against him.

IS THE OLDEST HORSEMAN

"Dad" Walsh Is 104 Years of Age—Comes from Erin's Isle.

"Dad" Walsh, Plymouth, Wis., who recently visited his son, Frank E. Walsh, mayor of West Allis, has the distinction of being the oldest horseman in the country.

"Dad" is 101 years old. Less than two years ago he drove one of his horses in a regular race. He is known by horse trainers from coast to coast, having made many trips around the racing circuits.

In Plymouth two years ago, Mr. Walsh, watching one of his horses race, thought the driver was not using his best efforts to win. When the first heat had been finished and the horse had crossed under the wire in the rear, "Dad" rushed out upon the track and upbraided the driver. When it came time for the second heat he was in the sulky, and he won the race handily, as the horse appeared to have the other racers outclassed.

Mr. Walsh was born in Ireland. He came to this country 72 years ago and settled in Plymouth.

Despite the fact that a century and more has rolled over his head, "Dad" is far from a feeble and decrepit old man. While the passing years have furrowed his face and thinned his hair, perhaps, they have not dimmed his faculties.

Tilted back in a chair, swapping tales of horseflesh and puffing his cob pipe—then "Dad" is in his element.

Nagel's Lost Opportunity.

Attorney General Wickersham took a party of public men out to Fort Myer in his automobile to see the aeroplane tests one day recently, says the Washington Post. Charles Nagel, secretary of commerce and labor, sat in the seat with Wickersham and they kept up a lively conversation during the trip.

When they arrived at the fort one of the party asked Nagel how he and Wickersham got along.

"Oh, we got along all right," repied Nagel, "until Wickersham began to talk French to me. I don't understand French."

"Then why didn't you get even by talking law to him?" exclaimed Secretary of State Knox.

Tribute to Tennyson.

There is a memorial window to Tennyson in Haslemere parish church with a tablet bearing the following inscription:

"In memory of Alfred, Lord Tennyson, poet laureate, in thankfulness for the music of his words, and for that yet more excellent gift whereby, being himself schooled by love and sorrow, he had power to confirm to the hearts of many their faith in the things which are not seen—their hope of immortality; in praise of God, the inspirer of prophet, and poet, this window is dedicated by some friends and neighbors in Haslemere."

Paradox.

Her—Why on earth do they call him the prying teller?

Him—Because that's his job.

Her—But it isn't. I asked him how much you had in the bank, and please to give it to me, and he wouldn't tell and he wouldn't pay.

The Reading Mask.

It has been discovered that the ancient volumes over which the student pores is full of germs; and some people say that the danger should not be faced without a silk and wire mask to fit over the mouth and nose. This reading mask is used in Paris.

BEAUTY AND FORTUNE FLED.

Three Women to Whom Life Has Been More Than Ordinarily Cold and Cruel.

Once they had all the honors which beauty and fortune could attain. Today they are cruelly disenchanted. One is the Russian Countess Pavlovna Lavetsky. She was received at the court of St. Petersburg. Her husband had castles, hundreds of serfs, millions of rubles. She had more jewels than the wife of a maharajah. But the count, an ardent soul, joined hands with the revolutionists. Implicated in the Riga affair he was shot. His possessions were confiscated.

The countess fled. She found a refuge in Geneva. Soon the little money she had brought with her was gone. She sold her jewels and found herself empty-handed. Then, courageously, she accepted a humble position in a cafe. She is there to-day waiting upon the patrons.

Another is the countess of Beauclerc, who a few years ago at Rome inspired Prince Victor with love. Were they married? She says so, the prince denies it. Their child had for its godmother Queen Marguerite, who gave it her name. The prince went to Brussels to forget his Roman adventures. The countess is at Milan, making hats and doing needlework.

The third is the baroness of Groustadt, whose authentic titles go back to the middle age. She is a dressmaker in a Parisian workshop. Poor women! Their romance is more cruel than those of the novelists.—Le Cri de Paris.

"PIPE OF PEACE" RESTORED.

Graduates of Colby College Are This Year Enabled to Continue Old and Honored Practice.

When the class of 1862 left Colby they introduced a custom which lasted until 1903, with all the succeeding classes, says the Lewistown Journal. This custom was that of smoking on commencement day a pipe, which was kept at the college for this purpose, and on this eventful day in the lives of the graduates they all took a smoke from the pipe, whether they had ever smoked before or not. The so-called "Pipe of Peace" was an immense pipe with a stem two feet long and a bowl with a human face engraved upon it in the front, while around the sides were found many other profiles. This wonderful pipe remained at the college for forty-odd years and was smoked by every man who graduated during that time, but in 1903 it mysteriously disappeared, and was not heard from until the past week, when it was returned to the college. With the disappearance of the pipe the custom disappeared, and thus the classes since 1903 have not had the privilege of smoking a "pipe of peace." Now, however, that the pipe is safely back at the college, and is being watched over by Dr. Hall at the library, it is very probable that the old custom will again be taken up and that the class of 1909 will on commencement day of this year be seen puffing away at this valuable old relic.

A Woman Onion Grower.

"You may have heard how the Rio Grande country has put the Bermuda onion growers out of business," said Capt. George H. Darler of Laredo, Tex. "Our most successful grower, by the way, is a lady, Mrs. E. C. Dodd, who lives in my town. She cultivated 135 acres this season and made a net profit on her onion crop of a little over $50,000. To make land bring a gain of $400 an acre is something few men have the ability to do, and yet this lady does not seem to regard her feat as entitling her to any great praise.

"Mrs. Dodd looks after every detail of her farm in person. Raising onions is no child's play; it involves hard work and great expense in our section, where irrigation is necessary. It is the intention of Mrs. Dodd to plant on a still bigger scale as she gradually brings more of her land under irrigation."—Baltimore American.

The Little Blind Bats.

Beneath the ruin there still existed a dungeon vault, gloomy and granite groined, yet, save for broken wall and stairway, perfect, on when poor wretches moldered there at the mercy of their feudal masters. Now not so much as one specter of a vanished sufferer haunted the place; only the bats passed their sleeping hours among the arches of the roof and hung, from five-clawed hands, with sinister, wrapped wings—like little dusky cherubs that worship with veiled faces at some mystery seat of evil.—Eden Phillpotts, "Sons of the Morning."

Condemns Motor-Speeding.

Bishop Samuel Fallows of the Reformed Episcopal church, preaching in St. Paul's church, Chicago, recently on "The Race for Life," took occasion to warn his congregation against motor speeding. "Let your moderation be known to all men," should be inscribed on every car," said the bishop. "The commercial, military and other uses of the automobile are endless. We therefore hail its advent with joy, not untempered, however, with wholesome fear."

Truthful Evasion.

"Have any luck fishing yesterday?" asked the man who gibes at angling.

"Sure," replied the truthful fisherman. "I brought home a fine string."

Then, to ease his conscience, he added, under his breath:

"There wasn't anything on it, however."

DIRECTOR PAYTON MAKES REPORT

Of the Land and Irrigation Exposition

WESTERN MICHIGAN LED ALL OTHERS

Fruit With Flavor Backed Up With the Goods

Has Turned the Thoughts of Hundreds Towards Western Michigan—What Advertising Has Done.

The United States Land and Irrigation Exposition at Chicago, which opened Saturday, November 20th, was one of the grandest displays of fruit, vegetables and cereals ever held in the United States. Every state west of the Mississippi river and the territories of New Mexico and Arizona were represented and showing the products of the irrigated lands. The great railways of the west had miniature railroads and irrigation canals on exhibition, showing the section of territory through which they pass and the beautiful fruit and fine vegetables that are grown on the irrigated lands. The fruit, I should judge is of a very tender variety, as they were shipped to Chicago packed in cotton, and in the most conspicuous places you would see the sign, "Hands Off," or "Please do not Handle the Fruit." These apples are highly polished and had the appearance of being dressed for the occasion, and attracted the attention of the fifteen or twenty thousand people who visited the Coliseum daily. These people were not from Chicago only, but from most of the states in the union.

In the northwest corner of the building, occupying fourteen hundred square feet of floor space, was the exhibit of the West Michigan Developement Bureau, with five hundred bushels of choice Michigan apples, nine large pillars of red apples, three on either side and three down the center of the booth, incased in white enameled wire netting with the word MICHIGAN in green apples running perpendicular in each pillar, and a most elegant display of strawberries currents, cherries and other perishable fruit, in large glass jars. On either side of the booth, were hung very large bunches of most elegant grapes. Just across the aisle, four young ladies were constantly serving the public with Michigan's delicious fruit. In addition to all this, was a very creditable display of corn, oats, peas, beans and potatoes, all artistically arranged. The West Michigan Development Bureau has proven to the public at large, that no state in the union excels Michigan in fruit and vegetables, and no state affords a more favorable opportunity to the industrious young man, than Western Michigan, was fully demonstrated at Chicago. No display in the Coliseum attracted so much attention as the one from Western Michigan. "I never saw such fruit." "I did not know that Michigan produced such elegant fruit." "Young man go to western Michigan instead of the west." "Why Michigan must be next to York state in the production of fruit." These are some of the exclamations that were made by the people as they first looked upon the display from Western Michigan.

The photographs taken, and on exhibition, of our rural homes, fields and orchards, played no small part in convincing the people that north western Michigan is not in the woods. We have proven beyond any doubt, that the Western Michigan fruit belt is more wonderful than any thing in the west, not only in the flavor of fruit, but in markets and freight rates. The exhibition at Chicago was a grand success, and it will be instrumental in locating homeseekers on our lands, and that it will enhance the price of land, there can be no doubt. Michigan has done herself proud.

MAKING GOOD

Charlevoix Boy Getting to Front in Business World

W. W. Washburn Elected Secretary-Treasurer of $500,000 Company.

The Detroit Times of December 1 prints the following showing how a Charlevoix boy is making good. Mr. Washburn is a son of W. W Washburn of this city:

With fifty-nine years of successful business behind it the well known Clough & Warren company, piano dealers, has been reorganized and incorporated under partnership title with a capitalization of $500,000. The new officers are: President Joseph A. Warren; vice-president and general manager, J. B. McIntosh; secretary-treasurer William W. Washburn; auditor, Leo W. Essex. These officers with Eugene G. Holmes, of Adrian, Mich. constitute the board of directors.

Mr. Washburn, who was formerly in the audit department of the Detroit Trust company, is a new member of the firm as is Mr. Essex, although the latter has been with the old company for some time. Mr. McIntosh has been with the firm for ten years, and for the past five years has been general manager, during which time the volume of business has been almost doubled. The Clough & Warren company factories are in Adrian, where the plant covers many acres of ground. So prosperous is the business that the factory is being run overtime to fill orders. No orders are being booked for immediate delivery owing to the rush. The Detroit salesrooms are on the second and third floors of the Valley building.

BASKET BALL

Arrangements Have Been Made For a Series of Match Games

High School Girls Will Endeavor to Keep up Reputation of C. H. S. A. A.

The high school athletic association have recently taken up the subject of basket ball. Arrangements have been made to have a series of class games as well as match games with outside teams.

Much enthusiasm has been aroused among the girls as well as the boys and the outlook for a strong representative team is good. Also good prospects for strong class teams.

Outside of tennis basket ball is the first athlene venture in which the girls of the high school could participate.

It has long been felt that some form of athletics in which girls could participate, should be inaugurated and not many of the girls have taken much interest in tennis, and with the class basket ball teams a good many of the high school girls can enjoy themselves.

Considerable time and expense have been expended to promote a successful season of games. To meet the expense of the season small fees will be charged for admittance to matched games and also the proceeds from the annual athletic play to be given Friday, December 10, will be placed in the basket-ball fund.

Look for invitations to dancing party December 14 at Hotel Elston.

NEW VEHICLE LAWS

Many Radical Changes Over the Present Law

Automobile Owners Should Save This for Reference.

A copy of the new Michigan vehicle laws takes effect January 1, 1910. A number of radical changes and additions have been made in rules governing the use of automobiles, and owners of autos will be wise if they take the trouble to post themselves on the provisions of the new law before they become effective.

By its provisions all registrations shall expire December 31 of each year and may be renewed at a cost of $1. The fee for new registrations has been increased from $1 to $3 per year. Owners of automobiles who desire to retain the numbers at present in use on their machines may do so by making application before January 1st.

The purchaser of a second hand machine must deposit $1 with the secretary of state and the person making the sale must within ten days report the same to the secretary of state, stating the name and business address of the purchaser and the number under which the vehicle is registered.

Numbers shall be displayed conspicuously on the front and rear of all cars, the number being of a shade differing from that of the background to which they are attached. The numbers must be attached in such manner that they will not swing with the motion of the car. Different colors of numbers and plates shall be designated for each year, that a glance will serve to show the season for which it is intended.

The law makes it imperative for the driver of a vehicle which is constructing a highway to turn aside in order that an automobile may pass. The driver of a car is required to use every precaution to avoid frightening horses attached to the vehicle passed, and it becomes the legal duty of each member of an auto party to render to the owner of such teams as are passed on the highways every assistance in their power to prevent trouble.

While the law recognizes the right of towns and villages to regulate the speed of autos within their precincts, it distinctly states that in no case must a speed in excess of the state law of 25 miles an hour be allowed, and within the corporate limits of cities the speed shall not be an excess of 10 miles an hour in the business section and 15 miles an hour in the residence section.

It is also provided that on approaching a person walking in the roadway or a horse or other draft animals being driven thereon the driver of a motor vehicle shall slow down to a speed not greater than 10 miles an hour and shall give a reasonable warning of his approach, to insure the safety of such person or animal.

MANY ACCIDENTS

To Hunters During Season Which Closed November 30.

Eighty Seven are on the Death Roll and Sixty-eight Injured.

The hunting season which closed November 30, was marked by more fatal accidents than usual, the number of dead reaching 87 and the injured 68. In the previous year 57 were slain, in 1907 82, and in 1906, 71. Wisconsin and upper Michigan continue to furnish the greater number of victims.

Included in this year's fatal accidents are several well known men. Dr. John W. Moore, surgeon of a mining company, was killed at Ironwood, Mich., and H. L. Bacon, also a physician, died from an accident at New London, Wis.; John G. Hoelzel, a real estate man of Milwaukee was killed on a hunting trip.

Gov. Hadley, of Missouri, is numbered among the injured. Several days ago while out hunting the governor injured his hand so badly that he was ordered home at once, the physician fearing blood poison.

A pathetic feature is furnished in the death on Monday, at Marquette, Mich., of George Gibbons, who formerly lived in Chicago. Two years ago Gibbons, while out hunting, shot and killed J. C. Cruse, a mining superintendent, of Iron Mountain, Mich., he having mistaken Cruse for a bear. The accident so prayed upon Gibbon's mind that he had to be taken to an asylum, where he remained until he died.

Several cases were reported where careless marksmen angered other hunters by firing at them, and were themselves given a scare by a return fire. It is so generally known in the Wisconsin woods that any person, who is fired upon by mistake for a deer will try to shoot the careless marksman, that the hunters are being more and more careful to make no mistake in what they are shooting at. Every year, however, there is a new crop of city hunters, who have to learn those dangers all over, and it is those city hunters who frequently cause the fatal accidents.

The majority of the victims were shot by companions.

DROWNED IN ROUND LAKE

Erastus Butler of Boyne City is Sunday Night

One of Circuit Court Jurors—Leaves Wife and Four Children.

Sunday evening Erastus Butler of Boyne City, a longshoreman of that place went down on the dock in the rear of Meyers & Neubert's store and asked for Captain A. H. Larson of the Miztic and when told the captain was aboard the ship started to go on the barge. As he stepped on the plank running from the dock to the ship he slipped and fell into the lake. In falling he struck his head on a spile stunning him and he did not come up again. His cry for help was heard by members of the crew, who rushed out but could not see the man.

Captain Kent of the United States Life Saving Station and two members of his crew were soon upon the scene and assisted in pulling the man out of the water with the pikepoles. Immediately after the man was pulled upon the dock the life savers began their work of artificial respiration. Dr. Wilkinson was summoned and the body was then carried in the sample room at Baker's Inn where medical aid was tried without result. No water was taken in the lungs of Butler.

Mr. Butler, who was on the jury in the circuit court here, was identified by one of the other jurors drawn from Boyne City. He leaves a wife and four young children and was thirty-three years of age.

The remains were cared for by S. M. See & Sons of this city.

Mattie Bedford will hold a china reception at her home on Park avenue Thursday, December 9, from 2:00 to 5:00 p. m. All interested in the work are invited to attend.

JOIN THE BOOSTERS

Who Will go to Traverse City Thursday, December 16

To Back up Charlevoix County's Exhibit at State Grange.

Next week the Michigan State grange will meet at Traverse City, the first time the grange has ever met in Northern Michigan. Every county in Michigan will be represented by delegates and it is expected that over three thousand of the representative farmers of Michigan will be in attendance.

Under the lead of Charlevoix county Northern Michigan will take advantage of the splendid opportunity to advertise this section and each county will make an exhibit of the products of their farms and orchards. In addition the best exhibits shown in Chicago, by the West Michigan Development bureau, will be brought to Traverse City and placed on display. For the past year the granges of this county have been busy and under the leadership of County Clerk Payton have collected together an exhibit worthy of the county. They have also succeeded in having Thursday, December 16, designated as Charlevoix Day and now ask the citizens generally to turn out and on that day make a demonstration which will prove beyond any doubt that that Charlevoix county is on the map. For months printed matter has been sent out of this county telling what Charlevoix county would do on that day and now its up to us to make good. Join the procession and make one of the army of Charlevoix County Boosters, December 16.

Rupert Awarded Five Thousand Dollars Damages.

CULLEN RELEASED ON $500.00 BAIL

Will Appear for Trial at the February Term of Court.

Kline Lumber Company vs. East Jordan Lumber Company on Trial—Many Divorces Granted.

As we went to press last week the case of George Rupert vs. The Boyne City Tannery Company was on trial. In this case Mr. Rupert asked for $20,000 damages which he alleged he received while employed by the defendant company in April 1907, by being injured by the company not having a dehairing vat around which he was employed in a reasonable safe condition of repair.

The case was hotly contested Nicholas & Nicholas of East Jordan, with Halstead & Halstead of Petoskey, of counsel appearing for the plaintiff while Harris & Rueggegger, of Boyne City, with Knowles & Converse of the same city as counsel looked after the defense. After an all night's session the jury brought in a verdict in favor of Mr. Rupert, of $5,000 damages. An appeal will probably be taken.

The next case tried was that of Alexander Bros. vs. Peter Weishuhn, replevin, Nicholas & Nicholas appearing for the plaintiff and J. J. Tweedle, of Traverse City, for the defendants. This case was over the sale of a stock of liquor in East Jordan. The case was hotly contested on law points and ended by the jury being directed to bring in a verdict for the plaintiff.

Monday the case of the A. B. Kline Lumber Company vs. the East Jordan Lumber Company was put on trial, resulting in the court directing a verdict in favor of the defendant with no cause for action. R. W. Kane and J. M. Harris were attorneys for the plaintiff and Nicholas & Nicholas for the defendant.

In the case of the people vs. Cullen charged with accepting a bribe bail was reduced to $500 and defendant released to appear at the February term for trial. Harry Nicholls and R. W. Paddock going sureties on the bond.

A prominent citizen of Charlevoix was heard to make the remark, "There are just three things in this world we are sure of—Death, Taxes and a Square Deal when we deal with Powers, the plumber. His word is as good as Rockefeflow's hand." We are sorry we do not know who this gentleman is, but we take off our hat to him just the same. In the mean time, keep it in mind that we keep everything in the plumbing, heating and tining business. Better have us overhaul your old heating job before cold weather, or better still, put you in a new one. Estimates cheerfully given. We solicit your patronage and guarantee a square deal.

Literary Notes

The Unpopular Queen of Italy

"Queen Elena of Italy" says Kellogg Durland in Woman's Home Companion for December, "is one of the most unpopular queens in Europe. Her court, which to meet the tastes of her people, should be bright, popular, brilliant, is really the dullest, the most stupid in the Western world. I have lived in many countries and I am more or less familiar with all the courts of Europe, but never have I heard a queen so universally spoken of with disrespect and disapproval by her own court. Queen Elena, in an American phrase, "plays to the gallery," then retires. She garners the wheat and ignores the chaff. She is quick to figure in dramatic exploits, but reluctant to submit to the daily grind.

"Rightly or wrongly, Queen Elena has the reputation among her own people—for being the stingiest queen in Europe. Apparently this is true. She patronizes almost nothing at all regularly, and if once in a while she lends her name to appear at a public bill, it usually means this and nothing more. As far as is known, she gives less to charity, in proportion to her means, than any queen. If the world at large appreciated to what extent she has carried her ideas of simplicity in dress, the glamour that surrounds her would fade. It is impossible to worship a dowd—especially if she be a queen, with all the splendor and taste of the world at her hand.

"I have seen her driving in the Campagna, or even through the streets of Rome, when I would never have believed her the occupant of her exalted position had I not known her. One need not be extravagant in clothes to be tasteful, but Queen Elena is not even tasteful. Here she is in unfortunate contrast to the queen-mother who, still living in Rome, is always exquisitely gowned, and no matter how simple always with unerring taste."

Surprising.

First Lady—I was so sorry to hear of poor Mrs. Brown's death. What was her complaint? Second Lady—Oh, didn't you know? The poor thing was found asphyxiated. First Lady—Good gracious, you do surprise me! I always thought she was a teetotaler.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

CHAPTER XXII—Continued.

Led by Selim, the four made a rush for the door leading into the chateau. They threw it open and passed through, flying as if for their lives. No one could tell how soon an explosion might bring disaster to the region; they put distance between them and the powder keg. Selim paused long enough to drop the bolts and turn the great key with the lever. At the second turn in the narrow corridor he overtook Chase and the scurrying women.

"Is there nothing to be done?" cried the princess. "Can we not prevent the explosion? They will cut off our means of escape in that"—

"I know too much about gunpowder, princess," said Chase dryly, "to fool with it. It's like a mule. It kicks hard. Gad, it was hard to stand there and hear those brutes planning it all and not be able to stop them!"

The princess was once more at his side. He had clasped her arm to lead her securely in the wake of Necuah's electric lantern. She came to a sudden stop.

"And pray, Mr. Chase," she said sharply, as if the thought occurred to her for the first time, "why didn't you stop them? You had the advantage. You and Selim could have surprised them—you could have taken them without a struggle."

He laughed softly, deprecatingly, not a little impressed by the justice of her criticism.

"No doubt you consider me a coward," he said ruefully.

"You know that I do not," she protested. "I—I can't understand your motive; that is all."

"You forget that I am the representative of these very men. I am the trusted agent of Sir John Brodney, who has refused to supplant me with another. I can't very well represent Sir John and at the same time make prisoners or corpses of his clients, even though I am being shielded by their legal foes. I'll not have Von Blitz saying, even to himself, that I have not only stolen his wives, but have also cast him into the hands of his Philistines. It may sound quixotic to you, but I think that Lord Deppingham and Mr. Browne will understand my attitude."

"But Von Blitz has sworn to kill you," she expostulated, with some heat. "You are wasting your integrity, I must say, Mr. Chase."

"Would you have me shoot him from ambush?" he demanded.

"Not at all. You could have taken him captive and held him safe until the time comes for you to leave the island."

"He would not have been my captive in any event. I could do no more than deliver him into the hands of his enemies. Would that be fair?"

"But he is a thief!"

"No more so than Taswell Skaggs and John Wyckholme, who unquestionably cheated the natives out of the very treasure we have seen carried away. I am not a constable nor a thief catcher. I am a soldier of the defense, not an officer of the crown, at this stage of the game. Today I shall contrive to send word to Rasula that Von Blitz has stolen the treasure chests. Mr. Von Blitz will have a sad time explaining this little defection to his friends. We must not overlook the fact that Lady Deppingham and Robert Browne are quite willing to take everything from the Islanders. Everything that Taswell Skaggs and John Wyckholme possessed in this island belongs to them under the terms of the will."

They were at the top of the second flight of stairs by this time and quite a distance from the treasure chamber. His coolness, the absence of any sign of returning sentiment, was puzzling her sorely. Half an hour before she had been carried away, rendered helpless, by the passion that swayed him. Now he spoke and looked as if he had forgotten the result of his storming. Strangely enough, she was piqued.

When they came into the well lighted upper corridor he proceeded ruthlessly to upset all of her harsh calculations. He stopped suddenly, stepping directly in front of her. As she drew up in surprise he reached down and took both of her hands in his. For the moment she was too amazed to oppose this sudden action. She looked up into his face, many emotions in her own—reproof, wonder, dismay, hauteur, joy.

"Wait," he said gently. They were quite alone. She saw the most wonderful light in his gray eyes. Her lips parted in quick, timorous confusion. "I love you. I am sorry for what I did down there. I couldn't help it—nor could you. Yet I took a cruel advantage of you. I know what you've been thinking too. You have been saying to yourself that I wanted to see how far I could go. Don't speak. I know! You are wrong. I've absolutely worshiped you since those first days in Thorbeg, wildly, hopelessly, day and night. I was afraid of you yes, afraid of you because you are a princess. But I've got over all that, Genevra. You are a woman a living, real woman, with the blood and the heart and the lips that were made for men to crave. I want to tell you this here in the light of day, not in the darkness that hid all the truth in me except that which you might have felt in my kiss."

"Please—please don't," she said once more, her lip trembling, her eyes full of the softness that the woman who loves cannot hide. "You shall not go on! It is wrong!"

"It is not wrong!" he cried hotly. "My love is not wrong. I want you to understand and to believe. I can't hope that you will be my wife. It's too wildly improbable. You are not for such as I. You are pledged to a man of your own world, your own exalted world. But listen, Genevra. See, my eyes call you darling even though my lips dare not. Genevra, I'd give my soul to hear you say that you will be my wife. You do understand how it is with me?"

The delicious sense of possession thrilled her. She glowed with the return of her self esteem, in the restoration of that quality which proclaimed her a princess of the blood. She was sure of him now. She was sure of herself. She had her emotions well in hand. And so, despite the delicious warmth that swept through her being, she chose to reveal no sign of it to him.

"I do understand," she said quietly, meeting his gaze with a directness that hurt him sorely. "And you, too, understand. I could not be your wife. I am glad, yet sorry, that you love me, and I am proud to have heard you say that you want me. But I am a sensible creature, Mr. Chase, and, being sensible, am therefore selfish. I have seen women of my unhappy station venture outside of their narrow confines in the search for lifelong joy with men who might have been kings had they not been born under happier stars—men of the great wide world instead of the soulless, heartless patch which such as I call a realm. Not one in a hundred of those women found the happiness they were so sure of grasping just outside their prison walls. It was not in the blood. We must marry and live and die in the sphere to which we were born. We must go through life unloved and uncherished, bringing princes into the world, seeing happiness and love just beyond our reach all the time. We are bound by chains no force can break—the chains of prejudice."

"I love you."

She had withdrawn her hands from his. He was standing before her as calm and unmoved as a statue.

"Just the same," he went on gently, "you love me as I love you. You kissed me. I could feel love in you then. I can see it in you now. You will marry Prince Karl in June, and all the rest of your life will be bleak December. You will never forget this month of March—our month." He paused for a moment to look deeply into her incredulous eyes. His face writhed in sudden pain. Then he burst forth with a vehemence that startled her. "My God, I pity you with all my soul! All your life!"

"Don't pity me!" she cried fiercely. "I cannot endure that!"

"Forgive me! I shouldn't say such things to you. It's as if I were bullying you."

"You must not think of me as unhappy—ever. Go on your own way.

THERE has been more or less effort toward creating a sentiment looking to the diverting of a part more or less, of the primary school fund to other purposes, and of course there has resulted an instantaneous and spontaneous howl of disapproval. Our public school system is regarded with a reverence which is commendable and advantageous so far as regards the school and the safeguarding of its welfare is concerned. However, unless some sentiment shall bring about differentiation between the school system, the effect of such blind reverence may cause the defeat of its purpose. Of late years the primary fund has been of such generous proportions as to cause itching of the palms among a political element, and sooner or later our somewhat antiquated system will breed such abuses and demonstrate its futility, not to say senility, to a degree that will render educational funds of the state very liable to raid by interests less reverent and scrupulous than the average citizen can contemplate with equanimity. The distribution of this fund under present restrictions certainly does not operate as it should to raise the standard of the teachers and teaching, even in localities where more or less of it is necessarily hoarded. In other localities where it might be used to an advantage deficiences must be raised by taxation. Our present system in any event places the expenditure of a great sum derived from general taxation in the hands of those almost always without special training or aptitude and in many instances grossly incompetent to judge of the need or comprehend the importance of our public schools. The amount of money available for school purposes can never be too large, but its use may work deplorable waste and inadequate advantage from the funds, always a fruitful source of what might prove disastrous cynicism and dissatisfaction. Nothing short of a complete change in our system of school management can ever render secure the generous support of the schools by the state. A change by which an absolute merit system might control all schools and expenditures through a state educational bureau, operated to secure the very best results in each locality would produce many other advantages besides the conservation of the benefits resulting from the use of state funds. The uniformity of advantages and results should be of greater importance than the per capita distribution of funds. The merit system of officering our educational department, by removing it from politics would at a stroke purge it from many abuses and the substituting of trained, capable men for the haphazard choice for political reasons, of school boards and commissioners could not help but be advantageous.—Central Lake Torch.

Not to Be Cheated.

"Dis is a mighty dishonest world, you know," said an actor, "and it doesn't hurt to be suspicious of some people. I sympathize with the old negro who came to a watchmaker with the two words on a check.

"'I want yer to fix up dese han's. Dey ain't kept no correct time fer one dem six months.'

"'Well, where is the clock?' demanded the watchmaker.

"'Oh, in my cabin.'

"'But I must have the clock.'

"'Don't I tell yer dat's makin de matter wid the clock 'cep'in one han's? An' here dey be. You jess want the clock so you kin tinker it and charge me a big price. Gimme back dem han's.'"—Young's Magazine.

The most striking paper currency in the world is the 100 ruble note of Russia, which is barred from top to bottom with all the colors of the rainbow, blended as when a sun ray passes through a prism. In the center in bold relief is a finely executed vignette in black. The remainder of the engraving on the note is in dark and light brown ink.

The Secret of Fitting Shoes

It is as much an art as making them. Your foot is individual—differs in shape and size—in sensitiveness and instep. To fit your foot with a last which protects it—with an upper which is snug without being tight—is a requirement of our salesmen.

Ample facilities are afforded for leisurely fitting. There is no excuse for a mislit with our methods. If one does occur, we wish to know it and remedy the trouble.

We are prepared to fill your needs in rubbers, arctics and overshoes. Slippers for holiday presents.

ARE MICROBES IN YOUR SCALP?

It Has Been Proved That Microbes Cause Baldness.

Professor Una, of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabouraud, the leading French dermatologist, discovered that a microbe caused baldness. Their theory has time and again been amply verified through research experiments carried on under the observation of eminent scientists. This microbe lodges in the Sebum, which is the natural hair oil, and when permitted to flourish it destroys the hair follicles and in time the pores entirely close, and the scalp gradually takes on a shiny appearance. When this happens there is no hope of the growth of hair being revived.

Dandruff is a contagious disease, which is largely due to a destructive microbe, which when left to pursue its course causes itching scalp, falling hair and baldness. Dandruff is caused by the microbe affecting the glands which produce the sebaceous matter, which latter then unnaturally dries up and scales off.

We have a remedy which will, we honestly believe, exterminate the microbe, promote good circulation in the scalp and around the hair roots and lighten and revitalize the hair roots and overcome baldness so long as there is any life left in the hair roots.

We back up this statement with our own personal guarantee that this remedy called "93" Hair Tonic will be supplied free of all cost to the user if it fails to do as we state.

It will frequently restore gray and faded hair to its original color providing loss of color has been caused by disease; yet it is in no sense a dye. Rexall "93" Hair Tonic accomplishes these results by making every hair root, follicle and pigment gland strong and active, and by stimulating a natural flow of coloring pigment throughout the hair cells.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely free from grease or sediment, is exceedingly pleasant to use and will not gum the hair or permanently soil the clothing or pillows.

We exact no obligations or promises—we simply ask you to give it a thorough trial and if not satisfied, tell us and we will refund the money you paid us for it. Two sizes, price 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain it in Charlevoix only at our store.—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, Prop.

Bran New Stock of Cutters and Sleighs on Hand

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. I also handle all kinds of farm implements. I have the agency for the Superior drill, the best drill ever sold in Charlevoix. Remember the old stand. First-class horseshoeing and general repairing.

Neighborhood Notes

A dispatch to some of the state daily papers the first of last week were to the effect that W. L. Judkins, station agent at Elfe Lake, had been arrested for taking a shot at a deer before the season opened and the game warden became aware, Mr. Judkins was placed under arrest and fined. The story is branded by Mr. Judkins, Frank Eseltine and other hunters of this city who were in the party as being manufactured from "hot air" and the thing in its entirety is a "pipe dream." The party were hunting near Crelghton in the upper peninsula and returned home Thanksgiving having but one deer in the entire party.

The American Telegraph and Telehpone Co. has applied for a writ of mandamus to compel the secretary of stats to issue the necessary license to carry on both businesses and the case promises to be long drawn out before settled. The company wants to do business in Michigan despite a law which prohibits the corporation entering the field in its present form.

The state law in question provides that a foreign corparation must form a local corparation to do business in this state, and that the latter organization can engage in only one line of industry. This would make it necessary for this company, which is organized under the laws of New York to organize two companies.

George M. Clark, of Mesick, has commenced divorce procedings against his wife, Hortie Clark. The couple were married February 11, 1905, in Sherman, and lived together just eleven days when Mr. Clark returned from work one day to find on the table a note from his wife saying she would no longer live with him. Some months later she changed her mind and would gladly go back to George, but George had been keeping tab on Hortie during her absence and found that she had made good friends with other men, and he sent out word that he was doing well without her. Now he declares that she is living at Boyne City as another man's wife and he feels that it is time to put her in a position to become this fellow's wife if she wants to be.

Twenty years ago at his home in Clare, William Archambault, G. R. & I. brakeman, buried two jugs of grape wine taken from his mother's cellar. The burying act was done with the thought that a couple of years later the wine would be unearthed. A school mate assisted. In a short time the wine was forgotten and remained so until a couple of months ago when he visited his old home and with the aid of a companion attempted to locate the buried wine. Several attempts were ineffectual and finally one jug was located in an unused dry well. The other jug was but a short distance from it. The wine aged under these conditions was of exceptional fine flavor. A large number of former friends assisted in sampling the wine and Mr. Archambault has saved a jug for home consumption.

The state has approximately a million and a half acres of lands which are classed as homestead lands. Auditor General Fuller is completing the necessary investigation in preperation to the transfer to the land department of 328,265 acres of these lands, and then it is expected the public domain commission will take steps to set apart in each county having tax homestead lands, a tract for reforestation purposes. The state will have charge of the tract, but it will be for the education and benefit of the people of the county. It is surprising the amount of tax homestead laws that still remains in counties which have been settled for years. The eastern counties have 91,101 acres, the western about the same, and the upper peninsula about 51,153 acres. There are only 23 counties of the 83 which have less than 100 acres; and 22 which have no state land at all.

The Pennies in the Box.

I'm Uncle Sam's most favored pet,
I'm hearty and I'm hale;
I've nothing in this world to do
But glide 'round with the mail;
But one thing almost breaks my heart,
And my nervous system shocks;
It's the everlasting pennies
That I'm fishing from the box.

I carry stamps and envelopes,
And postal cards and such;
And I would like to sell a few—
'Twould please me very much.
But a man can't sell unless you buy,
No matter how he talks;
So I have to keep on diving
After the pennies in the box.

It's alright in the springtime,
Or when the summer breezes blow;
But a different proposition
When it's thirty-two below;
When all your fingers and your toes
Are frozen hard as rocks,
It's most any thing but funny
Scratching pennies from the box.

And now quite confidentially,
I'll tell you something more:
A rural carrier (way out west)
Forgot himself and swore;
Says he: "I can stand the snow drifts,
I can stand the frozen locks,
But blast the measly pennies
In the blasted measly box."

When the "roll is called up yonder,"
And we shall gather there,
They wouldn't let a mail man in
If they knew he learned to swear;
If you want St. Peter to open the gate
When your rural carrier knocks,
Buy stamps and don't be guilty
Of putting pennies in the box.

Drew a Crowd.

"I once woke up"—

"And found yourself famous, eh?"

"No, but found that I had been attracting considerable public attention. I had been snoozing on a hotel veranda with my mouth wide open."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

WE OUGHT TO LIVE 150 YEARS

So Says Professor Fisher, Expert on Longevity.

$250,000,000,000 OUR VALUE

Yale Statistician Gives That Figure as Worth of Lives to the Nation—Prussia Far Ahead of Us in the Matter of Conserving Life.

Human life is increasing in length at a very rapid rate, but the span will have to go on increasing for a long time before it becomes even normal, for the human being ought to live to about 150 years if he did himself justice, says Professor Irving Fisher of Yale in a remarkable study which has just been issued by the national conservation commission. The commission believes that the greatest asset of society is human life.

Professor Fisher in a book of 129 pages says that after most careful study of vitality and health statistics he concludes that about 350 years ago the average span of life began to increase, and it has been gaining ever since. At the end of the seventeenth century the average life was about four years longer than at its beginning. At the end of the eighteenth another four years had been added to the average. Then came the nineteenth with its great strides in science in all departments. In the first three quarters of that century the average length of life increased at the rate of about nine years to the century.

Prussia Far Ahead of Us.

But in the last generation the increase has been faster than ever before. In Massachusetts the average length of human life is now increasing at the rate of about fourteen years per century. Yet Massachusetts is not making so good a record as is presented for Europe, as a whole, where the present increase is at the rate of seventeen years in a century. Prussia, the land of greatest advance in medical, surgical and hygienic science, is increasing its average longevity at the rate of twenty-seven years per century.

Professor Fisher quotes the result of Metchnikoff's investigations to sustain the contention that a normal age for men should be about 150 years. Metchnikoff found that mammals generally lived about five times the period devoted to growing. The one exception is man. The growing period of man is about thirty years. Therefore if he should lengthen his life up to the average of other mammals it would be about 150 years. Professor Fisher does not think that 150 years will be by any means an impossible attainment when the unexplored possibilities of science, sanitation and social betterment are developed.

Century and Half Not Impossible.

The present average age at which people die of old age after having been fortunate enough to dodge automobiles, diphtheria, tuberculosis, hunger and the other causes of death is stated as eighty-three years.

The economic value of human life and the advantage to the social whole in increasing its length are discussed most entertainingly by Professor Fisher. He points out that the sustaining of youth and old age is a tremendous onus on the producing capacity of society. As civilization becomes more complex a longer period must be given to preparation for the real work, consequently there is need for a compensating length of the period within which the individual, having thus been prepared at the social expense, may work for society in order to repay its investment in him.

Professor Fisher summarizes the various statistical estimates that have been made of the economic value of a human life. The American nation is credited with the ownership of $107,000,000,000 worth of property, but Professor Fisher reaches the conclusion that the human beings are economically worth somewhat more than $250,000,000,000 more in addition to this.

How a Life Grows In Value.

In the first year of existence the economic value of a life is only $90, because the infant life involves the great burden of the long preparation for a period of producing usefulness. From this year on the average value of a life increases until it reaches its maximum at thirty years, when it is $4,200 for the average American life. At that age the period of preparation is past, the time of greatest producing capacity is fairly being entered, and the expectation of life is large.

Every immigrant coming into this country is worth $875, says Professor Fisher. That is the minimum figure, representing the labor value. The arrival of 1,000,000 immigrants adds to the wealth of the nation $875,000,000.

LUNGHI, SPEED MARVEL.

Italian Says He Will Not Run on Indoor Tracks.

The great Italian runner Emilio Lunghi says he is through running on the boards. The swarthy young giant has run but one real indoor race, too, but Emilio says, "Once is enough for me." Lunghi ran his first indoor race in the 1,000 yard championship in Madison Square Garden recently. He finished in the ruck, and here is how it happened:

The Italian got away to his usual slow start, but started after the quicker ones, striding as only he can. The field came to the first turn. The leaders hit swung to it beautifully and rounded with scarcely a perceptible letup in their mad pace, but Lunghi, poor Lunghi—he nearly hit the outside rail, so far out did his big strides carry him. With the Italian champion the race soon became a struggle to determine not whether he should beat the others, but whether he should keep his feet or go sprawling on the boards. To make a long story short, Lunghi lost from five to ten yards at every curve and finished away back—not even placed.

Asparagus and Cabbage.

Cabbage, strange to tell, once grew without a head. It is a native of Europe. Wild cabbage, or the cabbage without a head, is called collards. Cultivation put a head on collards. Cabbage comes down by transmission from "caputi."

One of the oldest culinary vegetables is asparagus. Pliny and Cato ate it for rheumatic gout and praised it highly. We are growing it today in perfection, better than they ever had it. Certain folk in lower Europe use asparagus beans as a substitute for coffee.

"Mrs. Scratchit, can you catch rats?"

"Bless the child! What a remarkable question! What makes you ask that, dearie?"

"Why, I heard the ladies at mamma's yesterday say you were a regular old cat."—Baltimore American.

FARMERS MUST ENRICH SOIL

James J. Hill Sounds Warning to American Farmers

FOOD SUPPLY OF ENTIRE WORLD

The Demand Increases Faster Than the Earth's Products

He Advises Education in the Agricultural Colleges of the Country as Aid to the Farmers.

In an address at the National Corn exposition last week at Omaha, Nebraska, James J. Hill emphasized the necessity of increasing the productivity of the farms of this country. He said in part:

"The whole subject of our food supply and its relation to population, industry, growth, institutions and everything that concerns our future is appropriate for this occasion. The true statement of the broad general fact which it is most desirable that everyone should understand is this: that this country cannot feed the population which it must necessarily have within comparatively few years if it does not change its agricultural methods. The emphasis is all on that conditional clause."

"We cannot support our coming population upon the crop yield per acre that now satisfies us. We have to transform a growing decline in value and productivity of our soil under continued cultivation into a rapid increase in both. If the crisis can be seen moving upon us now, and if it took Great Britian more than half a century to raise her wheat yeild from above fifteen bushels to thirty-two bushels per acre, we have no time to lose."

"What has to be considered, the keynote of all present discussion is not the difficulty but the urgency of the task. The whole argument is one not of despair, but of reassurance; provided only that we do the obvious, indispensable and feasible thing, and do it now."

"Area is inelastic. Our public lands are almost exhausted. A few more years will see the last of them. And, lest they should not be squandered quickly enough, we not only offer them to everybody under conditions that invite and reward fraud, but when the government finds itself burdened with a particularly choice and valuable tract of farm land it holds a lottery and distributes it among Tom, Dick and Harry, no matter whether farmers or speculators, after they have been collected from different parts of the country by appealing to the passion for gambling. The areas to be obtained by reclamation work would not, all told, take care of our increase for two years. So there are final limits already in sight to the quantity of tillable land."

"The production of the soil and the food supply as compared with acreage and with population both decline. Our total agricultural product has been growing so rapidly and so immensely that we find it hard to realize that this may be entirely consistent with failure, at the same time, to keep pace with the growth of national needs. The country, unless there shall be a change, is approaching a time when it must import wheat for home needs."

"Other food products also lag behind the constant new demand. Since that demand cannot be escaped, and since not to meet it means want or a lowering of the standard of life and comfort in this country, which no American would wish to see, there is but one course before the nation. That is to increase the productiveness of the farm so that the earth's gifts may year by year equal or exceed the peoples requirements.

"It is more necessary because the great bulk of our foreign trade is made up of these commodities. Foodstuffs and articles but one remove from the soil are the currency with which we have paid for what we bought abroad.

"What we have to do in this country is to apply to farming the scientific knowledge, shaped now to practical use, that will raise our average product per acre to something like that of countries which lack many of our advantages of soil and climate. When Great Britan, in what her own people regard as an age of agricultural decline, can produce over thirty-two bushels of wheat to the acre, and other grains in proportion, while the United States calls it a big crop when its average rises to fourteen, it argues mere want of intelligence on the part of this country; a failure to grasp the simple reasons for coming hardship and its obvious and natural remedy.

"All that is needed to turn an impending national food deficit into a surplus to support in plenty 150 or more persons to the square mile in the United States, is the use instead of the abuse of the soil. The institutions that are doing most for the country today are the agricultural colleges. They should grow in number, in attendance and above all, in the expert knowledge and freedom from all political or other influence of their chiefs and instructors."

FRUIT GROWING PROFITS

Depend Largely upon the Cost of Production

More Variation in Income Than of Other Crops.

S. W. Fletcher of the Michigan Agricultural College, in an article in the 37th annual report of the State Horticultural Society of Michigan, makes the following statement:

The profits in fruit growing depends upon the cost of production, the cost of marketing and market conditions. There is more variation in the income from fruits than from most other farm crops. The average income however, is higher than the income from other common lines of husbandry. The last census shows that the average income, however, is higher than the income from other common lines of husbandry. The census shows that the average income in the different lines of farming are: Fruit, $716; Live stock, $787; Dairy $787; Cotton, $130. But the gross income means nothing, it is the per cent received on the capital invested that counts. Census statistics show that the average fruit farm returns 9.6 interest on the investment. Very much larger returns than these are common. On the whole the returns in fruit growing are apt to be larger than the returns in general farming provided the same degree of intelligence, energy and capital is invested in each case. The fact that 83 per cent of the fruit farms of the county are operated by the men who own them, as compared with 48 per cent of hay-and-grain farms, and 68 per cent of dairy farms, is further evidence that the fruit growers of the country are making their business pay.

WILL INCREASE MEMBERSHIP

K. O. T. M. M's. Aim to Initiate Class of Twenty-five.

Great activity is noticeable among the local Maccabees, who figure on initiating a class of twenty-five new members the latter part of this month. At the election of officers held on Thursday evening of last week a few changes were made in the chairs and all have joined in making a great effort to increase the membership. Deputy Great Commander Charles Perry, of Cadillac, was here to attend the meeting and will return later in the month to help in the work. After the regular routine business, the following officers were elected for the coming year:

Com.—Percy Marcy.
Lieut. Com.—A. Dan Durance.

FISHERMEN'S BANQUET

At Baker's Inn One of Finest Held in City

Steps Taken Toward Betterment of Association.

As went to press last week the Lake Michigan Commercial Fishermen were in convention discussing the Ming fish law.

At the opening of the afternoon session the books of the secretary and treasurer, J. J. Bolt of Grand Haven, were audited by that committee and were found to be O. K. The committee on resolutions then offered the following live amendments to the bettering of the association:

1. That fish should not be molested in transit.
2. That all fishermen must have a license regardless of the apparatus he is fishing with.
3. That the Game Warden Department be asked to use its influence to make the fish laws of the states bordering the great Lakes uniform.
4. That it shall be the duty of all members of the association to submit all grievences to the executive board.
5. Resolved that the law regarding the taking of spawn during the past season has been perfectly satisfactory to the fishermen.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Honorable President—Peter Jensen of Escanaba, unanimously elected.

Vice-President—Max Sharoeder, of Northport.

Sec'y and Treas.—J. J. Bolt, of Grand Haven, re-elected.

The members of the executive Board are: Geik C. Geiken, Charlevoix; Mr. Cooper, Cheboygan; John Coffie, Manistique; P. R. Klinke, Menominee; August Shembeck, St. Joseph, William VerDuin, Grand Haven.

The meeting adjourned without the date being set for the next meeting. The next meeting place was left for the executive board to decide.

Wednesday evening the local fishermen gave an elaborate banquet to the members of the convention and the business men of the city at Bakers Inn. To say the menu and services was of the highest class is unnecessary, to all who have attended similar functions at Bakers Inn. This however was if possible a little better than any that have gone before.

City Attorney Arthur L. Fitch, who acted as toastmaster, was at his best and never was at a loss in answering the many witty sallies made at him by the different speakers.

"Address of Welcome"—Mayor O. E. Wilbur.

"Our Organization"—J. J. Bolt, of Grand Haven.

"Judicial Inconsistancies"—Hon. J. M. Harris.

"The Pioneer Fisherman"—Willard A. Smith.

"The Fisherman and the Banker" W. J. Rachow.

"The Game Warden"—Hon. S. M. Rose.

"How to Catch Fish"—A. B. Nicholus, Sr.

"The Fishermen and the Courts"—Hon. F. W. Mayne.

"The Fisherman"—R. W. Kane

"Closing Address"—Hon. Peter Jensen.

Every speaker was securely inspired with the spirit of the evening,—"Good will toward the fishermen, and an admiration of the men who brave the perils of the sea to provide brain food for busy workers, and with this for their theme were at their best."

Cohen's five piece orchestra rendering the harmonious strains of music and the banquet with the courtesy of the citizens of Charlevoix will make an impression on all the members of the convention that our little city is one of the best in Northern Michigan, and is fully alive to the importance of the fishing industry and the desire of the followers of this arduous and dangerous profession to secure laws under which they can follow their calling with the same protection as do men of other professions. We were glad to meet them face to face and hope we may in the future have the pleasure of again entertaining the fishermen of Lake Michigan.

HANDSOME BUILDING

Charlevoix's New Postoffice Building a Handsome Structure

Preparations Being Made to Move into New Building Tonight.

Charlevoix people are honored with a new post-office on north Bridge street, built by George Van Pelt of Chicago, in compliance with the new postal laws in the construction of government buildings. The building has a large plate glass front with the entrance door on the south front corner. The interior of the postoffice is finished in natural oak and the postoffice fixtures are of the same material with nickel lock boxes equipped with combination locks.

The floor of the public entrance is of tiling while the side wall is finished with marbel slabs which stand four feet in heighth. In the front, the window is guarded with a large brass railing thus preventing the people from sitting in the front part of the building, and makes a fine decoration.

The rural carriers desks and boxes are to be in the basement which is arranged to the very utmost convienence possible to handle the quantities of mail in circulation.

On the second floor, of which entrance is gained by a beautifully decorated stairway from the north front of the building, and which is uniquely finished with oak and tiling, are three suits of rooms, each of which has its own special reception room. The hallways and closets are finished with tiling and marble and with the natural oak. Each of the offices has its own steam heating radiator and the latest improved electric fixtures. Mr. VanPelt has had a large window placed in each office so as to have plenty of light during the day.

The postoffice people expect to move into their new quarters tonight if the carpenters and finishers get their work done.

Fine Display of Products—Highly Commented on by Outside Granges.

Charlevoix county is "right up and a-coming" with its exhibit at the State Grange held at Traverse City this week, says the Evening Record. It is the first exhibit that one comes to when he enters the door, and one can't get past it until he has made a thorough examination of what it has to offer.

Tomorrow is Charlevoix Day and the county will be represented by at least 500 grangers. Remember the low railroad fare is good for any day during the meeting.

DOLE—DELAUDER

Prominent Antrim County People Married at Bellaire.

"At the S. W. Westbrook home last Sunday evening (November 28) at five o'clock, Andrew J. Dole of Bellaire and Mrs. Emma Delander, of Central Lake, were united in marriage by Rev. L. A. Kirkland. This couple is well and favorably known to the people of this county, Mr. Dole having been a resident of Bellaire for over thirty years, and Mrs. Delander came from Central Lake to Mr. Westbrook's home about a year ago where she has since resided. Monday they began keeping house in the Westbrook house in the east part of this village, where they will be at home to their many friends. For about twenty-five years Mr. Dole ran a livery barn in this village and since selling out has been devoting his entire time to his duties as superintendant of the poor and county agent for the State Board of Charaties."—Bellaire Independent.

WILL DOUBLE VALUE

In Fruit Growing if Better Methods are Used

West Michigan Development Bureau will Aid Farmer Along This Line.

A campaign for the encouragement of better methods of fruit growing and farming is being planned by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the current winter. There is absolutely no doubt but that with the adoption of better methods the products from the lands now under cultivation can be doubled in value, and that this can be accomplished with an expenditure of energy that is considerably less than double the amount now being devoted to the raising of crops.

The opportunities for improvement are especially numerous in the fruit growing industry. By means of the applying of scientific knowledge to the methods of cultivation and spraying both a quality and quantity increase can be secured. There are a few fruit growers in Western Michigan who are making their acres produce at the rate of $1,000 each per season. These men are, at the present time, exceptions. It is the ambition of the Bureau to explain to the many how the few are obtaining such remarkable results, that the many may in the future be as prosperous as the few now are. To the end, reading matter explaining the methods now in use by the experts is to be distributed among the many. Furthermore the plans of the Bureau contemplate the holding of meetings at convenient points at which the various phases of the work will be generally discussed. Efforts are also to be made to get the various farmers' organization to discussing the topics that are of the most vital importance at the present time.

This meeting has again been adjourned to Friday evening, December 17, on account of Charlevoix Day at the state grange.

Besides the reports of the officers for the past year, a new board of directors and new officers are to be chosen for the ensuing year. It is hoped that all stockholders will make special efforts to be present at the adjourned meeting.

THE FIRST STEP HAS BEEN TAKEN

So States Detroit Papers About Cement Factory

STANDARD CEMENT AND LIME CO.

Is the Name of the Newly Organized Company to Locate Here

According to Detroit Dispatches Work Will Start on New Plant Sometime Early in Spring.

Dispatches in the papers, dated from Detroit, announce the organization of a new cement company capitalized at $1,000,000, which plans to erect a cement plant at Charlevoix costing between $700,000 and $750,000.

It has been known here for some time that a movement was on foot to take over the property of the Standard Portland Cement Co. here, secure new capital, and go forward with the erection of a plant. The publication of the dispatch indicates that the first steps have been taken. While the terms of the deal are not known in full, it is understood that the holders of stock in the original company, known as the Standard Portland Cement Co., will be taken care of in the re-organization by stock in the new company, which is to be known as the Standard Cement and Lime Co., it being the intention to manufacture high grade lime as well as manufacture cement.

The Standard Company already has good kilns on its property just outside the city limits, in which lime of the highest grade has been burned, but they were handicapped through lack of direct mill facilties, and so did not do the business they might otherwise have transacted.

They have 400 acres of rock land, testing high the qualities necessary for cement of the highest grade, and once the manufacture of cement is started, the future of the industry is assured, for all conditions are favorable for success.

Judge F. H. Aldrich, of Detroit, former president, is also president of the new company, but new blood is presented in other positions, the Secretary-Treasurer being E. L. Buell, of Detroit, Henry K. Hunt, of Coldwater, vice-president, while Ellis Soper, of the engineering firm of that name, is general manager.

They plan, so it is stated, to erect a plant of 1,500 barrels capacity per day, and hope to start work next spring. One of the gentlemen interested in the new company is closely identified with the Michigan Central railroad, and others are said to be prominent in other lines of business.

The erection of a cement plant means much to Charlevoix, and our citizens will be glad to know of the prospects for a fulfillment of our hopes, and will, we are sure, stand ready to do all in their power to help make the project a success.

THEY INJURE CHILDREN

Ordinary Cathartics and Pills and Harsh Physic Cause Distressing Complaints.

You cannot be over careful in the selection of medicine for children. Only the very gentlest bowel medicine should ever be given, except in emergency cases. Ordinary pills, cathartics and purgatives are apt to do more harm than good. They cause griping, nausea and other distressing after effects that frequently health-destroying and a life-lasting annoyance.

We personally recommend and guarantee Rexall "Orderlies" as the safest and most dependable remedy for constipation and associate bowel disorders. We have such absolute faith in the virtue of this remedy that we sell it on our guarantee of money back in every instance where it fails to give entire satisfaction, and we urge all to need of such medicine to try it at our risk.

Rexall "orderlies" contain an entirely new ingredient which is odorless, tasteless and colorless. As an active agent, it embraces the valuable qualities of the best known intestinal regulator tonics.

Rexall "orderlies" are eaten like candy. They are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night; do not cause diarrhoea, nausea, griping, excessive looseness or other undesirable effects.

They have a very natural action upon the glands and organs with which they come in contact, act as a positive and regulative tonic upon the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel and its inky mucus lining; remove irritation, overcome weakness, tone and strengthen the nerves and muscles and restore the bowels and associate organs to more vigorous and healthy activity.

Rexall "Orderlies" completely relieve constipation, except when of a surgical character. They also tend to overcome the necessity of constantly taking laxatives to keep the bowels in normal condition.

There is really no medicine for this purpose so good as Rexall "Orderlies," especially for children, aged and delicate persons. They are prepared in tablet form, in two sizes of packages: 12 tablets 10 cents, and 36 tablets 25 cents. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store. The Rexall Store. Rich, but Wretched.

Frederick Albert, the third Krupp, became the richest man in the German emperor's dominions. When he died, in 1902, his estate was valued at nearly $200,000,000. Perhaps the inability of wealth to bestow happiness was never more strikingly exemplified than in his case. He was a dyspeptic, forbidden all the delights of the table and to smoke. Of late years a physician never left his side. A fearful melancholy claimed him, and his life was overshadowed by a nervous depression. All the world was wrong.—Pearson's Weekly.

Hollingsworth Chase, and forget that you have known me. You will find happiness with some one else. You have loved before; you can and will love again. I—I have never loved before, but perhaps, like you, I shall love again. You will love again?" she demanded, her lip trembling with an irresolution she could not control.

"Yes," he said calmly; "I'll love the wife of Karl Brabetz."

She started violently. Her cheek went red and white and her eyes widened as her thoughts went back to the naive prophecy in the treasure chamber.

She followed him slowly to the terrace. He stopped in the doorway and leisurely drew forth his cigarette case.

"Shall we wait for the explosion?" he asked without a sign of the emotion that had gone before. She gravely selected a cigarette from the case which he extended. As he lighted his own he watched her draw from her little gold bag a diamond studded case half filled. Without a word of apology she calmly deposited the cigarette in the case and restored it to the bottom of the bag.

Then she looked up brightly. "I am not smoking, you see," she said, with a smile. "I am saving all of these for you when the famine comes."

"By Jove!" he exclaimed, something like incredulity in the smile that transfigured his face.

"I could be a thrifty housewife, couldn't I?" she asked naively.

At that moment a dull, heavy report as of distant thunder came to their ears. The windows rattled sharply, and the earth beneath them seemed to quiver. Involuntarily she drew nearer to him.

"You could if you had half a chance," he said dryly and then casually remarked the explosion.

CHAPTER XXIII.

THE DISQUIETING END OF PONO.

LATER on he and Deppingham visited the underground chamber, accompanied by Mr. Britt. They found that the door to the passage had been blown away by the terrific concussion. The subterranean passage at this place was completely filled with earth and stone.

Deppingham stared at the closed mouth of the passage. "They've cut off our exit, but they've also secured us from invasion from this source. I wonder if the beggars were clever enough to carry the plunder above the flood line. If not they've had their work for nothing."

"Selim says there is a cave near the mouth of the passage," said Chase. "The tunnel comes out halfway up the side of the mountain overlooking the sea, and the hole is very carefully screened by the thick shrubbery. Trust Von Blitz to do the safe thing."

"I don't mind Von Blitz escaping so much, Chase," said his lordship earnestly, "as I do the unfortunate closing of what may have been our way to leave the chateau in the end."

"You must think me an ungrateful fool," said Chase bitterly. He had already stated his position clearly.

"Not at all, old chap. Don't get that into your head. I only meant that a hole in the ground is worth two warships that won't come when we need 'em."

Chase looked up quickly. "You don't believe that I can call the cruisers?"

"Oh, come now, Chase; I'm not a demmed native, you know."

The other grinned amiably. "Well, you just wait, as the boy says."

After satisfying themselves that there was no possibility of the enemy ever being able to enter the chateau through the collapsed passage the trio returned to the upper world.

Robert Browne and Lady Agnes were seated on the edge of the fountain in Apollo's grotto, conversing earnestly, even eagerly, with Mr. Bowles, who stood before them in an unmistakable attitude of indecision and perturbation. Deppingham gave Chase a look which plainly revealed his uneasiness.

"You don't mean to say, Lord Deppingham, that you're afraid the heirs will follow the advice of that rattle headed Saunders," said Chase, with a laugh. "Why, it wouldn't hold in court for a second. Ask Britt."

Britt cleared his throat. "Not for half a second," he said. "I'm only wondering if Bowles has authority to grant divorces."

"I dare say he has," said Deppingham, tugging at his mustache. "He's—he's a magistrate."

"It doesn't follow," said Chase, "that he has unlimited legal powers."

"But what are they raggling him about down here, Chase?" blurted out the unhappy Deppingham.

"Come in and have a drink," said Chase suddenly. Deppingham was shivering. "You've got a chill in that damp cellar. I can assure you positively as representative of the opposition that the grandchildren of Skaggs and Wyckholme are not going to divorce or marry anybody while I'm here, Britt and Saunders and Bowles to the contrary. And Lady Deppingham is no fool. Come on and have something to warm the cockles."

"All right, old chap," Deppingham said, with a laugh. "I am chilled to the bone. I'll join you in a few minutes." To their surprise, he started off across the terrace in the direction of the consulting trio.

"Just the same, Chase," said Britt after a long silence, "he's worried, and not about marriage or divorce either. He's jealous. I didn't believe it was in him."

"See here, Britt; you've no right to stir him up with those confounded remarks about divorce. You know that it's rot. Don't do it."

"My dear Chase," said Britt, waving his hand serenely, "I can't help laughing at the position you're in at present. It doesn't matter what you get on to in connection with our side of the case, you're where you can't take advantage of it without getting killed by your own clients. Horrible paradox, eh?"

When Deppingham rejoined them he was pale and very nervous. His wife, who had been weeping, came up with him, while Browne went off toward the stables with the ex-banker.

"What do you think has happened?" demanded his lordship, addressing the two men, who stood by irresolutely. "Somebody's trying to poison us; Lady Deppingham's dog is dead—poisoned, gentlemen!" He was wiping the moisture from his brow.

"I'm sorry, Lady Deppingham," said Chase earnestly. "He was a nice dog. But I hardly think he could have eaten what was intended for any of us. If he was poisoned, the poison was meant for him and for no one else. He bit one of the stable boys yesterday. It"—

"That may all be very true, Chase," protested his lordship, "but don't you see it goes to show that some one has a stock of poison on hand, and we may be the next to get it. He died half an hour after eating—after eating a biscuit that was intended for me! It's—it's demmed uncomfortable, to say the least."

"I'm sure you need the brandy after all this. Come along. Will you join us, Lady Deppingham?" said Chase.

"No. I'm going to bed!" She started away, then stopped and looked at her husband, her eyes wide with sudden comprehension. "Oh, Deppy, I should have died! I should have died!"

"My dear!"

"I couldn't have lived if"—

"But, my dear, I didn't eat it—and here we are. God bless you!" He turned abruptly and walked off beside her, ignoring the two distressed Americans. As they passed through the French window Deppingham put his arm about his wife's waist. Chase turned to Britt.

"I don't know what you're thinking, Britt, but it isn't so, whatever it is."

"Good Lord, man, I wasn't thinking that!"

There was not the slightest doubt in the minds of those conversant with the situation that the poison had been intended for either Lord or Lady Deppingham. The drug had been subtly, skillfully placed in one of the sandwiches which came up to their rooms at 11 o'clock, the hour at which they invariably drank off a cup of bouillon.

Imogene Browne was jesting, no doubt, but it is doubtful if any one grasped the delicacy of her humor when she observed, in mock concern, addressing the assembled mourners, that she believed the heirs were trying to get rid of their incumbrances after the good old Borgia fashion and that she would never again have the courage to eat a mouthful of food so long as she stood between her husband and a hymeneal fortune.

"You know, my dear," she concluded, turning to her husband, "that I might have had Lord Deppingham's biscuit. His wife asked me to take it. Goodness, you're a dreadful Borgia person, Agnes," she went on, smiling brightly at her ladyship. Deppingham was fumbling nervously at his monocle. "I should think you would be nervous, Lord Deppingham."

The most rigid questioning elicited no information from the servants. Ballo's sudden, involuntary look of suspicion, directed toward Lady Agnes and Robert Browne, did not escape the keen eye of Hollingsworth Chase.

"Impossible!" he said, half aloud. He looked up and saw that the princess was staring at him questioningly. He shook his head without thinking.

Despair settled upon the white people. They were confronted by a new and serious peril—poison. At no time could they feel safe.

One of the stable boys volunteered to carry a note from Chase to Rasula, asking the opportunity to lay a question of grave importance before him.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS

How One Kansas Community Learned a Lesson.

THE EXPERIMENT A SUCCESS.

Government Expert Showed What a Composition of Sand and Gumbo Would Do When Properly Handled. Many Benefits Realized.

Until recently the farmers south of Dodge City, Kan., were put to all sorts of inconvenience getting to town with their crops for market. In that section of Ford county is as good wheat land probably as can be found in the state. The owners of these lands are for the most part Germans, and their success in raising large crops was proverbial. But they had one particular legitimate complaint. That was the condition of the road between their farms and Dodge City.

For about two and one-half miles the main county thoroughfare passed through the sand hills. This sand hill road was about the worst to be found in that section. There were places in which the wheels sank into the sand halfway to the hubs, while the remainder of the distance was most difficult of passage. In the places where the sand was deepest an empty wagon drawn by two horses had hard work getting through. There was only one time when this road was in a fairly good condition, and that was directly after a hard rain. It would then pack itself hard. But this good condition would last only a day or two, and as rains are not overfrequent in this part of the state the sand hills road was bad nearly the year around. The citizens of Dodge City realized that they were confronting a serious problem, for many of the farmers were threatening to move away.

They appealed to Representative Edward H. Madison, who became interested. He went to the good roads bureau of the department of agriculture in Washington and asked that a roads expert be sent to Ford county. The request was immediately granted. W. L. Spoon was sent to Dodge City. After looking over the sand hills he made this reassuring statement:

"Your people can have as good roads as anywhere in the country and with as little expense as anywhere. I'll show you how to build 100 yards of good road through the worst sand and with that lesson you can continue it."

In the low places in the sand hills Mr. Spoon found close to the proposed road a gumbo-like soil which he mixed with 75 per cent of sand. With this mixture he constructed a road that after a hard winter and almost constant travel is still like a race track.

The proposed road was first lined—center stakes and side stakes set at the required distances. The roadbed surface was plowed, thus pulverizing every part of it. The furrow was then used separating turf and grass from the sand. The grading and leveling followed, making easy grades where required. The road plow was again used, this time outside the stakes. Three furrows were thrown to the stakes, making a brace to hold the clay in the roadbed. On top of the clay bottom in the road trench were spread sand and gumbo, care being taken that no grass or roots were left in it. The mixture of sand and gumbo was slanted so as to shed the water. Time hardens the gumbo into mixture.

This 100 yards of experiment waked up the farmers and the city folk of Dodge. Immediately two and one-half miles additional road were constructed. For nine months the road has stood the test and the farmers in other parts of the county are building similar roads.

"What benefit has been derived from this road improvement?" was asked W. J. Fuggerald, lieutenant governor a large merchant in Dodge City.

"That's hard to answer," he said, "because the benefits have been so many and varied. The town people have had an increase in business, and the farmers have made more on their produce because of the ease in which they get their stuff to market. But above all the farms south of town, whose owners had to depend upon the old road have increased in value 25 per cent. This is not an estimate, but founded upon the transfers actually made since the new road was built. Our people, who a year ago were despondent and saw no remedy for the bad road conditions, are now enthusiastic good roads builders."

OUR HIGHWAYS THE WORST.

Englishman Declares That He Found No Such Poor Ones Elsewhere.

While on a visit to this country recently Robert H. Jackson of Walburn Lodge, London, had during an interview occasion to criticise the condition of our highways. Mr. Jackson said: "No country I have visited has such poor roads as the United States. This is surprising to me, for if there is any improvement a nation can make that pays for itself it is the building of first class highways. I spent several weeks in Indiana—at Terre Haute—and as I am interested largely in farming I made frequent trips through the surrounding country. Some of the roads were six inches deep in dust, and in the winter, I doubt not, this dust becomes sludge. How the farmers can get to market with their crops is beyond me. Your roads wherever I have been are generally very bad. In England we have excellent roads, as in other countries of Europe.

"Road building and road improvement are done through the township unit system. Nearly every township has one or more steam rollers, and the cost of improving the roads or building new ones is borne by the property owners in proportion to the valuation of their holdings. Most of the modern roads of England have a foundation of brick—not of ordinary brick, but brick of large size. Upon this foundation are placed several inches of soil and on top of this soil limestone, which is ground into the soil by means of the steam rollers. This makes a first class, durable road that will keep in good condition during all seasons of the year. Over here most of the roads are made by simply turning the turf and grading. At least that is how they impressed me."

NEW MODEL HIGHWAY.

Hummelstown Pike, in Pennsylvania, an Example For Road Builders.

A modern road is the Hummelstown pike, near Harrisburg, Pa. It is made of a mixture of water gas tar, cement, liquid asphaltum road oil, carbolic disinfecting powder, sulphate of copper and oil of wintergreen. The sulphate of copper is used to prevent the oils from becoming ignited, and the wintergreen counteracts the odor of the others. There is nothing disagreeable about the smell. A curious effect of the mixture is its disinfecting power. During the past year there was not a single contagious disease in that section. The cost of applying the mixture is 5½ cents a square yard. The cement holds the dirt together like stone, and the oils make it waterproof, so that it readily sheds water. The road is never muddy and, unlike a tar road, does not become slippery in winter time. Frost has no effect on it at all, as the mixture will not freeze. The cost of applying is very small, as it is sprinkled on like water. That the method and the mixture are perfect successes has been shown the past summer. Despite the heavy automobile and wagon traffic, the road is perfectly smooth and very hard, and it has met the test in every way.

The story from Brazil that quinine is often served there as the last course of a dinner has been pronounced "a dream" by a director of the Brazilian colony of New York. But medicine at dinner is not unknown here. "Coffee-dip," which a newly wed couple, and whenever the young wife serves a dish prepared by herself a tablet containing a drug which is supposed to aid digestion is served with it. Of course it is all done in fun, but we are always glad to help the little joke along by taking the tablet." New York Tribune.

FOUND DEAD IN BED

William Henry Died Very Suddenly This Morning.

William Henry, a well known resident of Charlevoix, was found dead in bed about nine o'clock this morning, at his home on Upright avenue.

Mr. Henry lived in Charlevoix for the past ten years and was a member of the local Mason's lodge, also carried a $1000 insurance in the Maccabee. He leaves a wife and one adopted son about ten years old.

The funeral arrangements have not been made as we go to press, but will probably be held from the home. The direct cause of his sudden death was acute alcoholism.

This year they were $6 per capita. Five dollars were distributed for everychild of school age at the semi-annual apportionment in May, and another dollar in November. Mr. Keeler bases his belief, he says on the fact that each legislature is requiring additional corporations to pay their share of taxes.

Michigan now ranks second of all the states in the quality and value of potato production, being excelled only by New York, which has always stood first. Last year Michigan was third and Maine second, but this year the positions of the two states were reversed. Michigan is first in quality, its per cent in this regard being 91, against an average of 85 for the remainder of the country.

"People go wild over California and Florida fruit lands, but they could do as well and in many cases better if they would grow potatoes and beans in Michigan. The moist climate and abundant water account for Michigan's eminence in its own lines of produce.—Cheboygan Democrat.

Owing to the meddesome propensities of a setter dog belonging to a deputy game warden, a coffin containing 500 partridges killed out of season, was recently captured and confiscated at Ishpeming. That pup had been trained for birds and not for dead people.

Incendiaries have finally succeeded in practically wiping the once flourishing village of Sherman, Wexford Co., off the map. On July 3d last a large portion of the business section was destroyed, and on Wednesday evening of the last week in November, nearly all of the remaining business portion of the town shared a similar fate, with a loss of about $25,000, about half of which was covered by insurance. This is the last straw to the business men of the town and they will not again try to put life by starting anew in Sherman. Both fires are supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

A Sarcastic Tenor.

Roger, the celebrated French tenor, on one occasion was engaged for the sum of 1,500 francs to sing at the house of a rich financier. Roger, sang his first song magnificently, but no one paid him the slightest attention, and the guests talked their loudest. Presently the host thought the time had come for another song and sent for Roger. He could not be found and that evening was seen no more. Next day a note came from him, accompanied by the sum of 2,000 francs. The note ran thus, "I have the honor to return the 1,500 francs which I received for singing at your party, and I beg leave to add 500 francs more for having so greatly disturbed the conversation of your guests."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

As mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Much-Needed Rule.

There is an effort on foot in Chicago to secure an ordinance which will require that "chauffers" employed in piloting autos which are offered for public hire pass a rigid examination for efficiency. If they prove themselves worthy, a license will be duly issued to them by the city, subject to revocation if they are discovered drinking intoxicants while on duty, exhibit the speed mania or in any other way indicate that they are not worthy of trust. The examinations also will weed out incompetents and those physically unable to perform the duties of chauffer."

It would be well if such requirements could be exacted of all persons allowed to drive automobiles—not merely chauffeurs of "cars offered for public hire." Under the present regulations, the payment of a fee to the state is the only requisite for procuring a chauffeur's license in Illinois.

Changing His Environment

"I'm glad they voted the saloons out," said an ex-saloonkeeper in a newly dry town in Indiana. "I'm in a business now that is well regarded. When I meet my neighbors on the street now they speak to me with respect, but when I was keeping a saloon the people, particularly the good women of the town, would scarcely speak to me at all."

One of those good women, hearing of the man's remark, said, "One reason we never spoke to Mr. Blank when he was a saloonkeeper, was that he always went about with his head down, with a shamefaced air. Now he holds his head up and looks people in the face."

The inhabitant of the liquor paper's editorial sanctum may find it easy to write that "the saloon business is as respectable as any other business," but the man who keeps the saloon knows better.

HIDDEN DANGERS

Nature Gives Timely Warnings That No Charlevoix Citizen Can Afford to Ignore.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 1 comes from the kidney secretions. They will warn you when the kidneys are sick. Well kidneys exercise a clear amber fluid. Sick kidneys send out a thin, pale and foamy or a thick red ill-smelling urine, full of sediment and irregular of passage.

DANGER SIGNAL NO. 2 comes from the back. Back pains dull and heavy, or sharp and acute, tell you of sick kidneys and warn you of the approach of dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease. Doan's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys and cure them permanently. Here is proof in the statement of a nearby resident.

Mrs. S. C. Miller, Main St., Mancelona, Mich., says: "I have been wonderfully benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills. My back ached severely and my kidneys were sluggish. I felt poorly in every way and finally made up my mind to try Doan's Kidney Pills. I procured a supply and soon after commencing their use, I felt better than I had in months. You are welcome to use my name as one who can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills highly from personal experience."

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

Chase suggested to Rasula that he should meet him that evening at the west gate, under a flag of truce. The tone of the letter was more or less peremptory.

Rasula came, sullen but curious. At first he would not believe, but Chase was firm in his denunciation of Jacob von Blitz. Then he was pleased to accuse Chase of duplicity and double dealing, going so far as to charge the deposed American with plotting against Von Blitz to further his own ends in more ways than one. At last, however he agreed to follow the advice of the American—grudgingly, to be sure, but none the less determined.

"You will find everything as I have stated it, Rasula," said Chase. "I'm sorry you are against me, for I would be your friend. I've told you how to reach the secret cave. The chests are there. The passage is closed. You are to trap him in the attempt to rob the bank. I could have taken him red handed and given him over to Lord Deppingham, but you would never have known the truth. Now I ask you to judge for yourselves. Give him a fair trial, Rasula as you would any man accused of crime—and be just. If you need a witness—an eyewitness—call on me. I will come, and I will appear against him. I've been honest with you. I am willing to trust you to be honest with me."

CHAPTER XXIV

DEPPINGHAM FALLS ILL.

THAT evening Lord Deppingham took to his bed, with violent chills. He shivered and burned by turns and spent a most distressing night. Bobby Browne came to Wiltshire to see him before retiring. For some reason unknown to anyone but himself, Deppingham refused to be treated by the young man notwithstanding the fact that Browne had claim to a physician's certificate and professed to be especially successful in breaking up "the engine." Lady Agnes entreated her liege lord to submit to the doses, but Deppingham was resolute to irascibility.

"A Dover's powder, Deppy, or a few grains of quinine. Please be sensible. You're just like a child."

"What's in a Dover's powder?" demanded the patient, who had never been ill in his life.

"Ipecac and opium, sugar of milk or sulphate of potash. It's an anodyne diaphoretic," said Browne.

"Opium, eh?" came sharply from the couch. "Good Lord, an overdose of it would"— He checked the words abruptly and gave vent to a nervous fit of laughter.

"Don't be a fool, George," commanded his wife. "No one is trying to poison you."

"Who's saying that he's going to poison me?" demanded Deppingham shortly. "I'm objecting because I don't like the idea of taking medicine from a man just out of college."

"I've just given my wife a powder, old man. She's got a nervous headache," urged Browne tolerantly.

"Your wife!" exclaimed Deppingham, sitting up. "The devil!" He looked hard at Browne for a moment. "Oh, I say, now, old chap, don't you think it's rather too much of a coincidence?"

Browne arose quickly, a flash of resentment in his eyes. "See here, Deppingham"—

"I apologize, Browne," said Deppingham hastily. "I'm not afraid of your medicine. I'm only thinking of my wife. If I should happen to die, don't you know, there would be people who might say that you could have cured me. See what I mean?"

"You dear old goose!" cried his wife. "I fancy Selim or Baillo or even Bowles knows what a fellow doses himself with when he's bowled over by one of these beastly Asiatic ailments. Oblige me, Agnes, and send for Bowles."

He immediately recommended an old fashioned Dover's powder and ventured the opinion that a "good sweat" would soon put his lordship on his feet, "better than ever." Deppingham kept Bowles beside him while Browne generously prepared and administered the medicine.

Later in the night the princess came to see how the patient was getting on. He was in a dripping perspiration.

Genevra drew a chair up beside his couch and sat down. Lady Agnes was yawning sleepily over a book.

"Do you know, I believe I'd feel better if I could have another chill," he said. "I'm so beastly hot now that I can't stand it. Aggy, why don't you turn out on the balcony for a bit of fresh air? I'm a brute to have kept you moping in here all evening."

Lady Agnes sighed prettily and stepped out into the murky night.

"I say, Genevra, what's the news?" demanded his lordship. "Where is Chase?"

Now, the princess, it is most distressing to state, lied willfully avoided Mr Chase since early that morning.

"I'm sure I don't know. I had dinner with Mrs. Browne in her room. I fancy he's off attending to the guard. I haven't seen him."

"Nice chap," remarked Deppingham. "Isn't that he now speaking to Agnes out there?"

Genevra looked up quickly. A man's voice came in to them from the balcony, following Lady Deppingham's soft laugh.

"No," she said, settling back calmly. "It's Mr. Browne."

"Oh," said Deppingham, a slight shadow coming into his eyes. "Nice chap, too," he added a moment later.

"I don't like him," said she, lowering her voice.

"I've no doubt Agnes is as much to blame as he," said his lordship at last

"Why don't you marry him?"

"She's made a fool of more than one man, my dear. She rather likes it."

"He's behaving like a brute. They've been married less than a year."

"It really doesn't amount to anything, Genevra," he argued. "It will blow over in a fortnight. Aggy's always doing this sort of thing, you know."

"I know, Deppy," she said sharply. "But this man is different. He's not a gentleman. Mr. Skaggs was not a gentleman. Blood tells. He will boast of this flirtation until the end of his days."

"Aggy's had dozens of men in love with her really in love," he protested feebly. "She's not"—

"They've come and gone, and she's still the same old Agnes, and you're the same old Deppy. I'm not thinking of you or Aggy. It's Drusilla Browne."

"I see. Thanks for the confidence you have in Aggy. I dare say I know how Drusilla feels. I've—I've had a bad turn or two myself lately, sad—but never mind. By the way, what does Chase say about it?" he asked suddenly.

She started and caught her breath. "Mr. Chase? He—he hasn't said anything about it," she responded lamely. "He's he's not that sort."

"Ah," reflected Deppingham, "he is a gentleman?"

Genevra flushed. "Yes, I'm sure he is."

"I say, Genevra," he said, looking straight into her rebellious eyes, "you're in love with Chase. Why don't you marry him?"

"You—you are really delirious, Deppy," she cried. "The fever has"—

"He's good enough for any one—even you," went on his lordship coolly.

"He may have a wife," said she, collecting her wits with rare swiftness. "Who knows? Don't be silly, Deppy."

"Rubbish! Haven't you stalked Aggy and me full of the things you found out concerning him before he left Thorberg, and afterward—the letters from the ambassador's wife and the gloves—things your St. Petersburg friends have to say of him, eh? Besides, I'd give his head to marry you, having already lost it."

"You are very amusing, Deppy, when you try to be clever. Is there a clause in that silly old will compelling me to marry any one?"

"Of course not, my dear princess, but I fancy you've got a will of your own. Where there's a will there's a way. You'll marry him tomorrow if if"—

"If I were not amply prepared to contest my own will?" she supplied nimbly.

"No; if your will was not wrapped in convention three centuries old. You won't marry Chase because you are a princess. I'm awfully sorry for you, Genevra."

"Sorry for me? Dear me!"

"You're tremendously gone on him."

"Nonsense! Why, I couldn't marry Mr. Chase," she exclaimed, irritable at last. "Don't put such things into my head—I mean don't get such things into that ridiculous old head of yours. Are you forgetting that I am to become Karl's wife in June? You are babbling, Deppy."

"Well, let's say no more about it," he said, lying back resignedly. "It's too bad, that's all. Chase is a man. Karl isn't. You loathe him. I don't wonder that you turn pale and look frightened. Take my advice—take Chase."

"Don't!" she cried, a break in her voice. She arose and went swiftly toward the window. Then she stopped and turned upon him, her lips parted as if to give utterance to the thing that was stirring her heart so violently. The words would not come. She smiled plaintively and said instead: "Good night! Get a good sleep."

"The same to you," he called feverishly.

"Deppy," she said firmly, a red spot in each cheek, her voice tense and strained to a high pitch of suppressed decision, "I shall marry Karl Brabant."

W. R. C. REPORT

Corps in Good Condition and Membership Increasing.

The following is the official report of Baxter W. R. C. for the month of November and December:

November 11 was our regular meeting day and all had the pleasure of greeting Carrie Hemstreet, of Bellaire, state inspector of Michigan, who gave some very valuable instructions in the work and encouragement as to advancement in numbers and interest. In spite of the bad storm there were eighteen members present and all enjoyed the elegant supper which was served after the work was finished. All expressed the wish to have the inspector here again as soon as possible.

December 10 was election of officers, a list of which will appear after installation, which will be jointly with the Post, after a six o'clock supper. After the work a short program will be given. All of the Post and Corps are requested to be present and bring their partners. The Corps is gaining rapidly, having forty members in good standing and new members coming in at every meeting.

LANGFORD AFTER KETCHEL.

Colored Heavyweight Hotfoot on Trail of Middleweight Champion.

In spite of his defeat at the hands of Jack Johnson, Stanley Ketchel is still recognized as the middleweight champion of the world. When Ketchel began training for the recent Langford fiasco he refused to fight at the middleweight limit, giving as a reason that he could not reduce and remain strong. Sam Langford agreed to meet him at catch weights, therefore, and trained accordingly, only to have the bout called off by the Fairmont Athletic club of New York.

As there is no chance to secure a match with Johnson at present, Langford declares that he stands ready to sign articles for a forty-five round bout with Ketchel at catch weights or at 158 pounds, to be decided at Colma, Cal., at any time agreeable to the Michigan pugilist; also that he will agree to a $5,000 side bet and any fair division of the purse.

Langford says that he can stop Ketchel in quicker fashion than did Johnson, and by so doing he will convince the sporting public that, barring Jeffries, he is the only man in the ring capable of making the heavyweight champion bite the dust.

Langford argues that if Ketchel was ready to meet him in a ten round bout at the Fairmont Athletic club some time ago there is no reason why he shouldn't agree to another match with a longer route to go and better financial inducements. He says that he must whip Ketchel first before he can expect to secure recognition from Johnson.

Trigger Fish.

The curiously named "trigger fish" are plentiful in Japanese waters. They are of the ballistes genus, and their popular name is derived from the trigger-like peculiarity of the second spine of the dorsal fin. When the fin is erected the first ray, or spine, which is very thick and strong, maintains its elevated position so firmly that it cannot be pressed down by any degree of force, but if the second spine is pressed the first immediately falls down with a spring, like the hammer of a gun lock when the trigger is pulled. These fish are marked in a striking manner, some of them being very richly colored—ashen gray, blue and gold.—London Family Herald.

Alaska's Gold Dust.

"There are mighty few robbers in Alaska," said a resident of that place. "It doesn't take more than four years to try a criminal and give him proper punishment up there, and, besides, he can be caught. There is only one way out, and that is guarded. Besides, gold dust is as easily identified as different kinds of cloth or cattle. An assayer or a banker in Seattle, for instance, will tell you whether your gold is from one creek or another. There is sometimes 10 per cent difference in the value of the gold from streams running parallel on different sides of the same mountain. A boldup man who acquires gold dust would have to account for it when he went out, and it could be traced easily."—Des Moines Register.

Van Pelt Writes How Western Michigan was Boomed

AT LAND AND IRRIGATION SHOW

Rowe and Payton, "The Twins" Were There all the Time

This County Sure to Reap a Bountiful Harvest from the Advertising Done Backed up by the Goods.

Chicago, Ill., December 16, 1909.
Charlevoix COURIER,
Charlevoix, Mich.

My dear COURIER:—During the last few years, you have generously given space to many letters from me, principally regarding good roads, noxious weeds, tree planting, Farmers Friendly Association, etc., and from the facts that the roads have not improved as they should have done for the large amount of money expended on them, also because where there was one weed, twenty-six years ago, there are about ten thousand now; that instead of planting trees and having a row on both sides of the road, the few trees that were left to grow have been ruthlessly cut down, and nay and everything under three or four inches has been treated as rubbish and cut down, consequently, my letters, I think have been of mighty small avail.

Last summer, about half way between Norwood and Charlevoix, as I was taking some friends home with me, we came across a number of nice, young elms and maples that were from four to six inches in diameter that had just been cut down. A lady in the party exclaimed, "Oh, how shameful to see those nice, young trees so wantonly destroyed." I then called her attention to the worst of all, one man had saved a few nice trees, but for fear they might grow, had piled all the trees and underbrush which he had just cut down under these nice trees, so that when dry they could be easily burned, and of course, this would also kill the trees he had intended to save, and this performance is a very common one in our country.

Now, what I am going to write about in my opinion, is worth more than all the rest of the stuff I have ever written in regard to roads, trees, weeds, etc., and this is about the fruit grown in Northwestern Michigan, and the work done by the West Michigan Development Bureau.

It is really a shame that more people did not come from our part of the country to see the land and fruit exhibit, recently held at the coliseum in this city. They, virtually, would have gone home with long feathers in their hats, singing "A Farmer for every Forty. Hurrah for Michigan, as her Fruit Exhibit, Beat everything there was at the Show."

I cannot tell you how many people, but a great many, I asked "Have you been to the fruit and land show? Well how about the fruit exhibit?" and the same general reply was given, "Why Michigan has got 'em all skinned to a finish." Michigan had the real stuff; you could handle it, you could smell of it, you could feel it in the air, and you could hear the exclamation all over the coliseum, "Don't fail to see the Michigan exhibit."

"It is a dandy."

"Don't it beat ——, up the west?"

"Yes, and the New York fruit."

By the way, one gentleman asked, "Have you seen the fellow who talks so much?"

"The fellow? No, but I heard the twins hollow."

"Twins?"

"Yes, the twins."

"Why twins, who are the twins anyway."

"Why, don't you know Rowe and Payton? You ought to know them Everybody did that went to the show. If they didn't, they got acquainted with them before they left."

"Say," said one fellow, "You ought to see what a nice smart trick the twins played. They got two Wolf River Apples from different sections of the western country, and one from Northern Michigan, all three about the same size, and approaching a little group asked one of them if there was an expert apple grower there. They all handled the apples, looked wise, smelled them, and finally, one fellow said, "I guess this is from the state of C., this one from the state of W., and this one, I know, is from Michigan. "Prove up, old man, tell us how you know?" "Smell all three of these apples, and see whether you notice any difference in the odor, or aroma, as we should say in Boston. Everybody proceeded to do so, and the result was, he was correct."

Now, COURIER, I am not going to write any more about fruit, but you just tell all the imitation farmers up in our country who are talking about going west to grow up with the country, to go. Do not discourage them: I have tried that many a time. They will go any way, and then they will come back, providing they can get the money, and when they get back, will be satisfied with a forty and will make something out of this forty, which they did not do out of their old one hundred and sixty.

The fact is, our county, Charlevoix county, is in it. It is IT.* The medals Payton had to show down there for the premiums at the St. Louis fair helped the matter along too, and the day is not far distant when the Grand Traverse country will be the great fruit growing belt of the United States.

Why? Because it is only a night ride from the big markets; the fruit has the flavor; it stands the transportation and storage, and does not have to be packed in patent boxes or cotton. Throw it in anyway; it is sure to get there, as a certain young lady said when Rowe insisted on her eating the whole of a one and one-fourth pound apple

Another thing land can be bought for ten to twenty-five dollars an acre, as we all know, and the good Lord waters it freely, so what is the use of going west, paying $1,000 an acre, and depending on some old irrigation ditch to supply you with water, which is liable to take a turn, some night, and go in the opposite direction.

Success to the great fruit growing country, Northwestern Michigan, and to Charlevoix county in particular.

Yours very truly,
George H. Van Pelt.

SINKS IN LAKE ERIE

Big Steamer F. A. Meyer Victim of Treachcrous Waters

Crew All Saved—Loaded With Cargo of Lumber from Boyne City.

The Boyne City Journal of Monday contains the following:

The big steamer F. A. Meyer, which cleared from this port only a few days ago, has met her doom and is another victim of the treacherous waters of Lake Erie. A telegram recieved this morning by W. H. White Company only stated that the boat had foundered in Lake Erie but that the crew had been saved.

The boat had on a big load of hardwood timbers and lumber, having been loaded by the W. H. White Co., and was bound for Buffalo. In company with a number of other vessels she had been held up in Lake St. Clair by the ice which they were unable to get through until a powerful tug had been secured to open a passage. She finally got down through the Detroit river only to meet disaster in the open lake. She foundered off Port Colburn. No further particulars are known than were contained in the above mentioned dispatch. This is the first trip that the Meyer ever made to Boyne City. She was a large craft for this harbor and attracted a lot of attention by her size and apparent seaworthiness while lying here at the docks. She was delayed in loading by the severe weather and was here for some time.

WILL INCLUDE TWENTY COUNTIES

Important Meeting of West Michigan Development Bureau

HELD IN TRAVERSE CITY FRIDAY

Manager Rowe has Resigned. R. H. Ellsworth his Successor

Headquarters Will Remain in Traverse City—Cost of Chicago Exhibit Twelve Thousand Dollars.

One of the most important meetings of the Western Michigan Development bureau was held in Traverse City, Friday.

Nearly every county, in the district was represented by their directors. One of the important matters considered, was the broadening of the district to include 20 counties instead of 15 as now. Another important matter taken up at the executive session of the directors, after the general meeting was the resignation of George E. Rowe, manager of the publicity headquarters. Other matters of importance were the reading of the reports of the finances of the bureau and the expense of the Chicago exhibit.

Mr. Rowe's resignation was accepted and a vote of thanks tendered for his efficient work.

The report of Treasurer Hendel showed that the actual cost of the exhibit in Chicago, including the publication of 200,000 booklets, was approximately $8,000 and about $4,000 of preliminary expenditures which could not be charged directly to the exposition account. The treasurer reported that there was on hand about $3,000 and about $1,800 pledged from various counties, leaving a deficit of about $300 at the present time. It was stated by all the directors present that the amount expended was worth while, and the results will fully justify the cost and effort expended by the various committies and officers.

It was decided to admit Osceola county to membership and to allow the counties of Missaukee, Montcalm, Ottawa and Mecosta to become members if they wished.

An attempt was made to change the headquarters of the bureau from Traverse City to Grand Rapids or Ludington, but was defeated, the contention being successfully made that Traverse City was the most centrally located and the fact that the Grand Traverse region had made the largest contributions to the exhibit and the fact also that this section of the state was recieving increased recognition made it desirable to retain the offices there, with R. H. Ellsworth, who has been chief clerk of Mr. Rowe, in charge.

MEETING OF STATE GRANGE

Was the Most Successful One Held in Its History.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY DAY A HUMMER

Over Five Hundred Were Present from this County

Traverse City Will Have Next Year's Meeting—Legislative Committee Make Strong Report—Over 48,000 Members.

The meeting of the State Grange, held at Traverse City last week, was by all odds, the largest attended and best session that the order ever held during the thirty-seven years it has been in existance in Michigan. Every county was represented with delegates, there being a total of 487 voting representatives present, besides hundreds of visitors. Worthy Master Hull made a splendid presiding officer and "harmony and push the order" was the watchword of every member present.

Charlevoix county was in the lime light all the time from the arrival in the city Friday of E. B. Wurl, D. S. Payton, M. J. Stafey and E. E. Stroud, who immediately commenced getting the Charlevoix county exhibit in shape. Saturday they were joined by Glenn M. DuBois and Monday by Martin Ruhling of the exhibit committee. Tuesday morning the showing made of the products of this county was not only a revelation to the farmers of Southern Michigan but to residents of our county as well.

Thursday was designated as Charlevoix Day and when the train rolled in it unloaded four-hundred enthusiastic Charlevoix county rooters to swell the hundred already in the city. E. B. Ward, as a candidate for executive committee, received over a hundred votes and was was well up among the eleven candidates for the three positions although his name was the last one on the ballot.

This session will go down in history as one which will have a far reaching effect on the destinies of the order and of the state. For the first time in the history of Michigan the farmers of both peninsulas met and exchanged ideas in regard to the agricultural interests of their localities, while exhibits made by Charlevoix, Kalkaska, Emmet, Wexford and Grand Traverse counties and the Western Michigan Development Bureau demonstrated beyond dispute that the Grand Traverse Region is the coming fruit producing section of the world.

In legislative matters the grange reiterated its position on its former demands and declared for the recognition of the people's demands by their representatives in the following words taken from the report of Hon. H. F. Baker, chairman of the sub-committee on legislation.

"It is a most regretable circumstance that by our votes, men are placed in legislative positions capable of so flippantly disregarding our wishes and insulting our intelligence. It can only be accounted for on the hypothesis that we are seeing darkly through the glasses of our partisanship, wandering aimlessly in the wilderness of political bondage, unable to distinguish between our friends and our enemies, and falling an easy prey to our economic adversaries.

The situation is aptly set up in editorial expression in one of our leading newspapers in this language.

"Of recent years the politicians have lost, somewhat, their anxiety relative to the position the grange would assume on various state questions, making the claim that the members individually do not support heartily the propaganda which is indorsed in the resolutions adopted at these annual meetings Ways have been found by the political strategists to prevent the grangers from heartily supporting the planks of their platform relative to state affairs, and there has been in existence a quiet contempt for the organization as a political factor in the state."

If we would exert the influence in state affairs to which our members and financial importance entitle us; if we would command remedial or constructive legislation fitting our needs, we must take the position politically, that those not with us are against us, rewarding those who fight our battles and retiring to private life those indifferent to our wishes."

Mr. Baker and Mr. Palmer were re-elected as members of the executive committee, the new member who will take the place of Mr. Campbell being Jerry Lawson, one of the most enthusiastic grangers in the upper peninsula.

The report of Secretary Hutchins showed a paid membership June 1, of 48,000 and over $44,000 in the grange treasury.

Next year's meeting will be held in Traverse City, the universal verdict being that in looking after the comfort of its guests no city ever excelled Traverse in the splendid efforts put forth to have every arrangement made for.

TAKES EFFECT JANUARY 1

New Law in Regard to Liquor Shipments C. O. D.

Passed By Congress Last Session—Will Make Liquor Difficult to Secure.

Uncle Sam will put into force on January 1, 1910, a new criminal code which will aid in the keeping of New Year's resolutions, at least in the prohibition states. The measure was passed by congress during a stolen moment from the tariff consideration of the extra session and legislators who have not before had time to read it are likely to have their attention called to its provisions in a demand for an "explanation." It will curtail the practice of shipping liquor "C. O. D." into prohibition states and cuts off that last source of supply, which has been regarded as inviolable.

"No railroad company or carrier," says the code, "shall ship liquor into a prohibition state to other than the bona fide consignee." Violation of this section is punished by a fine of $5,000 and two years imprisonment, or both.

Not content with this restriction of the supply, the makers of the code have set down that every package which does not bear the name of the person to whom it is shipped, the kind of liquor which it contains, and the quantity on the outside may be seized and condemned.

Here is the climax which has made the thirsty in the prohibition states wonder if the code committee could have been "packed" against them. It says that it shall be forbidden to collect the purchase price of liquor shipped as interstate commerce "before, on, or after delivery."

If this latter provision has not killed the C. O. D. package the framers of the code would like to have another opportunity further to amend it. In the south where the prohibition wave has submerged several states bordering on others less afflicted in this regard, the express business has been enormous. In some cities it is represented that quantities of packages of liquor would be shipped to the agent so that the man who wanted a quart for Saturday night need not even exercise the forethought which foretells a Saturday night thirst on Wednesday.

With almost the convenience of the wholesale liquor depot he could upon ten minutes' warning of the craving run over to the express office, ask for a package for "John Doe," pay the C. O. D. charges and snap his fingers at the law.

BOUND OVER ON THREE CHARGES

Result of Examination of Herman L. Swift at Boyne City

TWELVE THOUSAND DOLLARS BAIL

In Default of Which Swift Lies in County Jail.

Restraining Order Granted By Judge Mayne, Against Swift Using Funds of Beulah Home for His Defense.

The Swift case is the principal subject in the minds of our people at the present time. The examination was held Tuesday of last week. Prosecuting Attorney Nicholas representing the people and J. M. Harris and L. F. Knowles representing the Board of Trustees of the Beulah Home. From the Boyne Citizen we take the following account of the examination:

"After looking over the warrant Prosecutor Nicholas asked for a recess until four o'clock, that he might interview the boys and see what evidence the people had. When court convened at 4:00 p. m. Tuesday the prosecutor moved the discharge of the prisoner on the original warrant sworn to by Chief of Police Beach on information by John Housner, and the prisoner was re-arrested on another warrant and the examination taken up.

John Housner said he was ten years of age, and had came to the home about a year ago from Ann Arbor. He said his father was dead and his mother lived in Ypsilanti. He was on the stand for about seven hours and after his examination was concluded the prosecutor moved that the prisoner be bound over to the circuit court which convenes in February. Justice Shepard fixed the bail in the case at $1,000.

After this case was disposed of he was again re-arrested on another warrant on information by Elliot Fay. In the second case after a lengthy examination, he was again bound over to the circuit court with bail fixed the same as on the former case, making the total bail $8,000.

Mr. Swift was unable to furnish the bail and at about seven o'clock was taken to the 2x4 jail and locked up.

Yesterday morning another warrant was sworn out against Mr. Swift by Chief Beach on information furnished by Merril Griffin. Prosecutor Nicholas being called home to East Jordan, City Attorney Urquhart was named assistant prosecutor and conducted the examination yesterday.

William Griffin of Grand Rapids, father of the boy, was present in court. To the Citizen Mr. Griffin said he was a machinist and was steadily employed in the Furniture City. The mother of the boy was dead and he had married again, and he hearing of what a good place the Beulah Home was had sent his boy here and was paying $10.00 per month for his board.

Merrill Griffin occupied the stand most of yesterday and in the afternoon the examination being concluded, the same course was taken as in the former cases; the bail being fixed the same, at $4,000, making the total bail $12,000 in the three cases.

Being unable to furnish this amount the prisoner was again remanded to jail and locked up. The prisoner was brought to the county jail Friday to await trial in the circuit court."

Friday at Traverse City Judge Mayne issued a temporary restraining order preventing Mr. Swift from using any of the funds of the Beulah Home in any manner for his defense.

The restraining order was granted because Mr. Swift, who is superintendent of the Beulah Home, maintained that he had a right to use the funds to secure his bondsmen so that he could have his liberty pending his hearing at the next term of court. The board of trustees composed of some of the most prominent residents of Boyne City, maintain that while they want to give Mr. Swift a square deal in

AUNT ALINE'S TRYST.

The Coming of the Man She So Anxiously Awaited.

By JOHN ROXBURY.

[Copyrighted, 1909, by Associated Literary Press.]

"Why, Aunt Aline! How pretty you look! What have you been doing to yourself? And where are you going?"

Little Mrs. Jordan had run into her aunt's cozy home on her way to the city.

"Is it so unusual for me to look nice, Dollie?"

Miss Sherwin turned from the glass before which she had been giving a final touch to the soft brown hair that waved around her white forehead and smiled quizzically at her niece.

"No," returned the little matron with cordial sincerity; "you always look lovely to Dan and Nell and me. But you never would buy yourself pretty clothes while we were with you, and as you were always doing something for us you seldom took time to look at yourself. That new golden silk is wonderfully becoming, and that mechlin at your throat, with the quaint brooch of coral and silver, is most artistic. And you have such a pretty pink color in your cheeks. One would think you were a young girl going out to meet your lover."

The color of which Dollie Jordan spoke deepened to rose. Miss Sherwin laughed an odd, embarrassed little laugh.

"You mustn't come flattering me," she said. "And—I don't wish to hurry you, but you'll miss your train to town if you stay much longer."

"Mercy me! So I will!" And with a hasty glance at the clock and a hurried kiss she rustled away at a rapid rate.

Miss Sherwin turned again to the mirror when she was alone. Dollie was right. She did not look her twenty-nine years. Indeed, the face that smiled back at her was very sweet in its bright serenity. The lips that parted over gleaming white teeth were full and rosy. And the large gray eyes looking forth from under dark brows and lashes, had a beaming brilliance.

"Maurice won't see much change in me," she said as she put on her hat. She slipped on a wrap and took up her gloves. But suddenly she stood still, shaken by the cruel dread. Suppose he were not there! It was a long journey here from Australia. Accidents innumerable were occurring every week. What if he were the victim of one? What if he were ill and could not make the trip?

The one greatest dread of all she did not voice even to her inmost consciousness.

"How foolish you are, Aline Sherwin!" she said, with an impatient little toss of her head. "His last letter said he would meet you at the old trysting place on this day, the anniversary of our engagement there. Maurice would never break his word."

She walked at a brisk rate the many blocks which lay between her home and the park. The charming suburban pleasure ground was gorgeous in its autumnal robes of amber and crimson and—living gold. There was a continual drifting of glowing leaves through the blue, hazy air. And everywhere children were making merry, running and laughing and playing games.

But when Alice Sherwin reached the great stone fountain where the leaping water no longer glittered her heart sank with sudden, sharp disappointment. There was no one there but a gray haired, spectacled man, who glanced up at her approach only to bend instantly again over the paper he was reading. She took out her watch and consulted it.

"My watch is fast! I am ten minutes too soon! How foolish of me to—to fear!" she said.

She walked up and down the graveled path near the fountain. To sit still was impossible. She watched the different avenues up which he might come. It was ten years since they had parted. Five minutes gone! At 3 he would be there, he had written—seven minutes!

And he need never have gone away. If it had not been for Mary's unexpected death she might have gone with him. But Aline had declared herself bound to take care of her sister's children.

Six months ago freedom had come to her. Dan was a man and prospering, Dollie was married, and Nell had gone to live with her. So Aline Sherwin wrote to her lover that she was waiting for him.

The clock in the tower clanged out the hour of 3.

She started, and her reticule fell to the ground. Three, and he was not here! Each clang of the bell had struck on her heart like a blow.

"You have dropped your bag!" The man on the bench picked it up and offered it to her, lifting his hat. "I'm afraid you are disappointed," he said pleasantly. "You were expecting some one?"

She hardly glanced at him. But she was in the mood for confidence, and his voice was sympathetic.

"Yes," she said and sat down. "A friend who has been long abroad was to have met me here this day, this hour, and he has not come."

"I've been a great traveler myself," the man said. "Where did your friend live abroad?"

"In Australia." Her eyes were still seeking an advancing figure along the paths that led to this fountain.

"I've been there. But of course it's a mighty extensive country, and the cities are populous."

"I suppose so," she assented abstractedly. Her heart was like lead within her. "It would be absurd to suppose you had known Maurice Farrar there."

"Let me see," he repeated musingly. "Yes, I did know a man of that name. What did your friend look like?"

"He was straight and handsome," she returned dreamily. "He had brown, beautiful eyes, a classic, clean shaven face and curling black hair."

"Oh, that isn't the man I know at all," he said positively. "The Farrar I know is rather stout and bearded and quite gray."

Miss Sherwin nodded indifferently. She glanced again appealingly at the clock in the tower. Fifteen minutes past 3! He was not coming.

"There is no use waiting," she said, rising. All the joyousness seemed to have left her. "Maurice would be here—if he were alive!"

How dreary the golden day had grown, how cold! And what a moan there was in the wind, a desolate cry that found its echo in her heart.

The man on the bench sprang erect, a straight, robust figure. He thrust his smoked glasses in his pocket, swept off his hat and held out eager arms.

"Aline!" he cried. "Maurice is here!"

For one wild, stunned, incredulous moment she stared at him. Then she took a faltering step forward. His arms closed around her as she sobbed out her gladness on his breast. Marked by exile and labor, prematurely gray, and yet the same—the old sweet smile, the old loving eyes!

"It was no deliberate deception, dear. It was only when I saw you approaching that I remembered the glasses I must wear in strong sunshine and slipped them on. I cannot read with them on," he laughed, "but I bent over the paper just the same. My dearest own girl, will you forgive me? You have kept your girlish beauty. The fever that made my hair gray makes me look older than I am."

Her color had come back in a rosy tide. She smiled up at him, straight, stalwart and dignified before her, and she cried to him: "You are handsomer than ever, Maurice! But even if you were really lame and crippled—yes, and blind you would be, as you've always been, the only man in the wide world for me!"

And now the leaves had a merry rustle and the wind a song of joy.

Pleasures of Trout Fishing.

Catching trout is not the only thing that makes fishing a mountain stream worth while. The early morning ride to the place where you are to commence your day's sport is in itself pleasant to a degree wholly missed by those who take their rides later in the day. During the early hours of the day the air is fresh and invigorating. Every leaf and spear of grass by the roadside sparkles with dew, and the forest is pungent with pleasant and health giving odors that are dispelled as the sun rises above the treetops and dries the moisture on leaf and twig. As you drive quietly along you may have the good fortune to see a deer browsing in a roadside clearing. He stands watching you for a moment or two, then turns quickly and with graceful leaps disappears among the trees. An old fox steps out into the road and trots boldly along ahead of you for some distance, but when he discovers that you are gaining on him he turns for an instant, shows his teeth with a snarl and then slinks away into the bushes. Farther along a partridge with her brood of chicks has also ventured out into the road, and when she, too, discovers that you are drawing uncomfortably near there is a great to do. With outspread wings and uttering the plaintive cry made by a mother partridge when she believes her young to be in danger, she hastily collects the members of her family and leads and drives them back into the security of the woods.—Outing Magazine.

Mike Was There Too.

"I was there," said the reporter, "and I know this is true.

"It was during the Spanish-American war. Most of the boys had enlisted in the navy, and there were more than a score aboard the converted cruiser St. Paul, commanded by the then Captain Sigsbee, who was commander of the ill fated Maine at the time she was destroyed in Havana harbor.

"We were slowly making passage out of New York harbor one brisk sunshiny morning, and several hundred of the crew were lined up along the ice rail of the main deck watching the various craft plying up and down the river.

"By and by a magnificent swanlike private yacht, owned by a prominent Philadelphian, steamed swiftly alongside of us, and when we were within easy speaking distance a beautiful and elegantly attired woman on the bridge called out in a clear soprano voice to the officer on our bridge, 'Is Captain Sigsbee aboard?'

"Before the man addressed could reply a huge, brawny coal heaver, with a voice that seemed to almost make the ship vibrate, shouted from the main deck, 'Yes, Captain Sigsbee is aboard, an' so is Mike O'Neill!'

"In the roar of laughter which followed even the fair inquirer after the captain joined, though the officer on our bridge turned purple with rage and mortification."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Capacity Limited.

To a swell cafe I led her, and on tea-caps I fed her, yet methought I noted sadness in her eye. Then as we departed and for a street car started, she let out a large and soulful sigh. When I asked her trouble, her answer knocked me double. "I get so full of turtle that I had no room for pie."—Chicago News.

GOOD NEWS

Many Charlevoix Readers Have Heard It and Profited Thereby.

"Good news travels fast," and the thousands of bad back sufferers in Charlevoix are glad to learn that prompt relief is within their reach. many a lame, weak and aching back is bad no more, thanks to Doan's Kidney Pills. Thousands upon thousands of people are telling the good news of their experience with the Old Quaker Remedy. Here is an example worth reading:

E. J. Fuller, 820 S. Union St., Traverse City, Mich., says: "Two years ago I gave a public testimonial in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills and today I can recommend them just as highly as I did then. For several years I was afflicted with kidney complaint and though I doctored faithfully and took a number of so called kidney cures, I found but little relief. I had often heard of Doan's Kidney Pills and as I had seen them recommended by local people, I decided to give them a trial. I procured a supply and I was astonished at the results of their use. In a few weeks Doan's Kidney Pills entirely relieved me and since then I have been free from kidney trouble. I have had no need of a kidney medicine during the past year or so. Other members of my family have taken Doan's Kidney Pills and in each case, benefit has been received."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

Didn't Like Papers.

Alexander William Kinglake, author of "Eothen" and "History of the War in the Crimea," was no admirer of the daily press, even in early days. Once, looking at old Mr. Villiers, then father of the commons, he remarked, with his meditative drawl, "A clever man, a very clever man, before he softened his brain by studying the newspapers."

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

That will be the end of your Mr. Chase."

"I hope so," he said. "But I'm not so sure of it if you continue to love him as you do now."

She went out with her cheeks burning and a frightened stir in her heart. Her thoughts raced back to Neenah's airy prophecy.

How could she face the charge, "I'm not so sure of it," unless she killed the indictment, "If you love him as you do now."

Lady Agnes and Browne passed by without seeing her and entered the window. She heard him say something to his companion, softly, tenderly—she knew not what it was. And Lady Agnes laughed—yes, nervously. Ah, but Agnes was playing! She was not in love with this man. It was different. It was not what Neenah meant—nor Deppingham, honest friend that he was.

Down below she heard voices. She wondered—inconsistently alert—whether he was one of the speakers. Thomas Saunders and Miss Pelham were coming in from the terrace. They were in love with each other! They could be in love with each other. There was no law, no convention that said them nay! They could marry—and still love! "If you continue to love him as you do now" battered at the doors of her conscience.

Her maid came in, and she prepared for bed. Left alone, she perched herself in the window seat to cool her heated face with the breezes that swept on ahead of the storm which was coming up from the sea. Her heart was hot; no breeze could cool it; nothing but the ice of decision could drive out the fever that possessed it.

"It is impossible—incredible!" she was saying to herself. "I could not love him like that. I should hate him. God above me, am I not different from those women whom I have known and pitied and despised? Am I not different from Guelma von Herrick? Am I not different from Prince Henri's wife? Ah, and they loved too! And is he not different from those other men—those weak, unmanly men who came into the lives of those women? Ah, yes, yes! He is different."

She sat and stared out over the black sea, lighted ruthlessly by the distant lightning. There she pronounced sentence upon him—and herself. There was no place for him in her world. He should feel her disdain; he should suffer for his presumption. Presumption? In what way had he offended? She put her hands to her eyes, but her lips smiled—smiled with the memory of the kiss she had returned.

"What a fool! What a fool I am," she cried aloud, springing up resolutely. "I must forget. I told him I couldn't, but I can—I can." Halfway across the room she stopped, her hands clinched fiercely. "If—if Karl were only such as he!" she moaned.

She went to her dressing table and resolutely unlocked one of the drawers, as one would open a case in which the most precious of treasures was kept.

"It was so silly of me!" she muttered. "I shall not keep them for him." The drawer was partly filled with cigarettes. She took one from among the rest and placed its tip in her red lips, a reckless light in her eyes. A match was struck, and then her hand seemed to be in the clutch of some invisible force. The light flickered and died in her fingers. A blush suffused her face, her eyes, her neck. Then, with a guilty, shamed, tender smile, she dropped the cigarette into the drawer. She turned the key.

"No," she said to herself; "I told him that I was keeping them for him."

CHAPTER XXV.

THE TRIAL OF VON BLITZ.

THE next morning found the weather unsettled. There had been a fierce storm during the night, and a nasty mist was blowing up from the sea. Deppingham kept to his room, although his cold was dissipated.

Chase had been up nearly all of the night, fearful lest the Islanders should seize the opportunity to scale the walls under cover of the tempest. All through the night he had been possessed of a spirit of wild bravado, a glorious exaltation. He was keeping watch over her, standing between her and peril, guarding her while she slept. His thoughts, however, did not contemplate the princess fair in a state of wretched insomnia, with himself as the disturbing element.

He looked for her at breakfast time. They usually had their rolls and coffee together. When she did not appear he made more than one pretext to lengthen his own stay in the breakfast room. "She's trying to forget yesterday," he reflected.

Selim came to him in the midst of his reflections, bearing a thick, rain soaked envelope.

"It was found, excellency, inside the southern gate, and it is meant for you," said Selim. Chase gingerly slashed open the envelope with his fruit knife. He laughed ruefully as he read the simple but laborious message from Jacob von Blitz:

"Where are your warships all this time? They are not coming to you ever. Goodby. You got to die yet too. Your friend, Jacob von Blitz. And my wives too."

Chase stuffed the blurred, sticky letter into his pocket and arose to stretch himself.

"There's something coming to you, Jacob," he said, much in the wonder of Selim. "Selim, unless I miss my guess pretty badly, we'll be having a message, not from Garcia, but from Rasula before long. How are my cigarettes holding out?"

"They run low, sahib. Neenah has given all of hers to me for you, excellency, and I have demanded those of the wives of Von Blitz."

"Selim, you must not forget that you are a gentleman. That was most ungallant. But I suppose you got them?"

"No, sahib. They refused to give them up. They are saving them for Mr. Britt," said Selim dejectedly.

"Ah, the fickleness of women!" he sighed. "There's a new word for you, Selim—fickleness."

It was far past midday when he heard from Rasula. He had seen the princess but once, and then she was walking briskly, wrapped in a rain coat, followed by her shivering dogs and her two Rapp-Thorberg soldiers. Somehow she failed to see Chase as he sauntered hungrily, almost imploringly, across the upper terrace, in plain view. Perhaps, after all, it was not the weather.

Rasula's messenger came to the gates and announced that he had a letter for Mr. Chase. Rasula had this to say:

We have reason to suspect that you were right in your suspicions. The golden plate has been found this day in the cave below the chateau, just as you have said. This much of what you have charged against Jacob von Blitz seems to be borne out by the evidence secured. Last night there was an attempt to rob the vaults in the company's bank. Again I followed your advice and laid a trap for the men engaged. They were slain in the struggle which followed. I have to inform you, sir, that your charge against Jacob von Blitz does not hold good in the case of the bank robbery. Therefore I am impelled to believe that you may have unjustly accused him of being implicated in the robbery of the treasure chests. He was not among the bank thieves. There were but three of them—the Boer foremen. Jacob von Blitz came up himself and joined us in the fight against the traitors. He was merciless in his anger against them. You have said that you will testify against him. Sir, I have taken it upon myself to place him under restraint notwithstanding his actions against the Boers. He shall have a fair trial. If it is proved that he is guilty, he shall pay the penalty. We are just people.

Sir, we, the people of Japat, will take you at your word. We ask you to appear against the prisoner and give evidence in support of your charge. He shall be placed on trial tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. On my honor as a man and a believer I assure safety to you while you are among us on that occasion. I, Rasula, will meet you at the gates and will conduct you back to them in safety. If you are a true man, you will not evade the call. RASULA.

"Well, it looks as though Von Blitz has spiked your guns," said Deppingham. "The dog turns against his confederates and saves his own skin by killing them."

"In any event," said Browne, "you spoiled his little game. He loses the treasure, and he didn't get into the vaults. Rasula should take those points into consideration."

"He won't forget them, rest assured. That's why I'm sure that he'll take my word at the trial as against that of Von Blitz," said Chase.

"You—you don't mean to say, Mr. Chase, that you are going into the town?" cried Lady Agnes, wide eyed.

"Certainly, Lady Deppingham. They are expecting me."

"Don't be foolhardy, Chase. They will kill you like a rat!" exclaimed Deppingham.

"Oh, no, they won't," said the other confidently. "They've given their promise through Rasula. Whatever else they may be, they hold a promise sacred. They know I'll come. If I don't they'll know that I am a coward. You wouldn't have them think I am a coward, would you, Lady Deppingham?"

The next morning he coolly set forth for the gates, scarcely thinking enough of the adventure to warrant the matter of fact goodbys that he bestowed upon those who were congregated to see him off. His heart was sore as he strode rapidly down the drive. Genevra had not come down to say farewell.

"By heaven," he muttered, strangely vexed with her, "I fancy she means it. She's bent on showing me my place. But she might have come down and wished me good luck. That was little enough for her to do. Ah, well!" he sighed, putting it away from him.

As he turned into the tree lined avenue near the gate a slender young woman in a green and white gown arose from a seat in the shade and stepped a pace forward, opening her parasol quite leisurely as he quickened his steps. Her eyes gleamed brightly, and she was breathing as one who has run swiftly.

"You are determined to go down there among those men?" she demanded, the smile suddenly giving way to a look of disapproval. She ignored his hand.

"Certainly," he said after the moment of bewilderment. "Why not? I—I thought you had made up your mind to let me go without a—a word for good luck." She found great difficulty in meeting the wistful look in his eyes. "You are good to come down here to say goodby. We're almost strangers again."

"I did not come down to say goodby," she said, her lips trembling ever so slightly.

"I don't understand," he said.

"I am going with you into the town—as a witness," she said, and her face went pale at the thought of it.

"Genevra," he cried, "you—you would do that?"

"Why not, Mr. Chase?" She tried to speak calmly, but she was trembling. After all, she was a slender, helpless girl—not an amazon! "I saw and heard everything. They won't believe you unsupported. They won't harm me. If I swear to them that what you say is true they"—

Her hand was on his arm now, trembling, eager, yet charged with fear at the prospect ahead of her. He clasped the little hand in his and quickly lifted it to his lips.

"I'm happy again," he cried. "It's all right with me now." She withdrew her hand on the instant.

CANDIDATES are beginning to feel the pulse of the people in regard to their choices in the primaries next September. Sounds good, doesn't it? Got to know how the people feel about them as well as how the party leaders feel, for of course the leaders will feel as the people do. If the people of Charlevoix county are in earnest, if they are in favor of having their say as to who shall be their public officials next April they will turn out to the election, enroll and vote, yes, on the primary proposition, and from that time until the September primary carefully study the records of the different candidates, who ask their votes, then vote for the men, who best represent the principles in which they believe.

The COURIER assures to every candidate a square deal in its columns but shall until the close of the primaries advocate the principles in which it believes. After the votes are counted the choice of the people shall be our choice as we believe that the people can always be trusted to make a wise choice We only ask that every voter record his vote.

THE meeting of the State grange at Traverse City and the hard work done by the committee from this county and the splendid response made by our citizens generally in turning out 500 strong Charlevoix County Day, has done more to bring the people of Northern Michigan and the counties of Grand Traverse and Charlevoix closer together than anything else that could possibly have been conceived. Already Traverse City is planing on next year's meeting and if we wish to follow up the good work we have begun for Charlevoix county, we must work from now to next December on the same lines as we did this.

CHARLEVOIX BOY KILLED

John Swails Meets Death at Cleveland Saturday

While Engaged in His Duties as a Railway Fireman.

John Swails, a Charlevoix boy, was instantly killed while in discharge of his duties as fireman on the L. S. & M. S. railroad, in the yards at Cleveland, early last Saturday morning.

The pony engine, upon which John was at work, undertook to cross the main track when No. 1, Chicago and New York express, running at the rate of forty-five miles an hour, struck them head-on. The four men on the pony were found within ten feet, all with their heads crushed, while the engine was thrown 500 feet into another pony, demolishing both. The fireman on the passenger was killed and the engineer badly injured.

John was born October 30, 1886, and left Charlevoix to take up his duties with the railroad four months ago. How to Avoid Making Ruts.

Serious damage and results from the common practice of driving in the track made by preceding vehicles especially with heavy loads on narrow tires. Ruts would scarcely, if ever appear on a well constructed road if drivers would vary their track even only a few inches. It would be noticed that no matter how deep the rut, it will disappear when a sharp turn occurs as the horses vary their course around a corner and traffic spreads out over the full width of the road. This is one of the principal causes of deterioration of a macadam road and could easily be remedied with a little care on the part of the drivers.

Bad Highway Building.

A road engineer puts it this way: "There ought to be a law to stop fools building highways. This idea that the outer edge of a highway—sod dirt and stone, all should be thrown into the center of the road ought to entitle the people who do it to ninety days in jail."

Neighborhood Notes

G. W. E. Wolford, a deputy sheriff from Grayson, Ky., arrived here on the early train last Sunday morning, after Charles Justice, the young fellow who had been arrested on orders from the Kentucky sheriff and was being held by local officers. Wolford left on the afternoon train with his prisoner in charge for his home in the blue grass state.

Justice has been arrested on a charge of rape committed on an old woman, and was out on bail awaiting trial when he skipped for unknown parts. He was traced to the upper peninsula, thence to Bay City and Saginaw, and finally to this vicinity where he had relatives. The Kentucky officer reported that this was not Justice's first offense of a similar character, but that the last one was of a very serious nature, and that the prisoner would probably now get his deserts.

It is reported that Justice tried to escape from the officer when at Cadillac and after being taken to a restaurant for supper, but that Wolfford was too spry for his prisoner and collared him before he had run only a few rods.—Manistee Herald.

Rev. R. C. Fenner, pastor of the First Baptist church of Cadillac, has announced that the Northern Michigan Baptist Assembly association will enter the summer resort hotel business between Lakes Cadillac and Mitchell next spring. The association will build a summer hotel on the boulevard where it crosses the channel between the two lakes, about three and one-half miles from the city. It will be the first summer resort on the lakes and marks the opening of the resorting business there.

Colon C. Lillie of Coopersville, has announced his intention of seeking the Republican nomination for the lieutenant governorship at the next state primaries. Mr. Lillie is attending the meeting of the state grange here. He has been mentioned at various times as a tentative candidate along with Fred Postal and Fred M. Alger of Detroit, Senator Luren D. Dickinson, father of the primary bill, has been spoken of as the candidate of the drys but as yet has made no positive announcement of his candidacy. Mr. Lillie makes the statement that unless something unforseen occurs he will be in the race when the starter says "go."—Traverse City Record.

The terrible loss of lives on the Great Lakes this year is appalling. Nearly four times the loss of last year. Nearly half of this year's toll has been taken during the past two weeks. Last year 33 lives were snuffed out.

A study of the mortary list shows that since the opening of navigation last spring seventy-five lives have been lost on Lake Erie, fifty on Lake Superior and six on Lake Michigan. A curious feature is that Lake Huron does not figure in the casualty table, although the lake usually bears her full share of the gruesome burden.

The president of the lake carrier's association, William Livingston, says he thinks it would be to the interest of all if the navigation season closed December 1. On an average the carriers would be men and money ahead.

The State Association of Superintendents of the poor, at their state convention, elected the following officers: Andrew J. Dole, of Bellaire, president; M. V. Billings, of Grand Rapids, vice-president, and W. H. Prater, of Paw Paw, secretary-treasurer. The convention next year will be held at Lansing on a date to be fixed later by the executive committee.

A legislative committee was appointed by President Laberteaux, of Albion, and instructed to codify the laws of the state relating to the actions of superintendents of the poor and to county infirmaries. Some of these laws came in for severe criticism from the members during the informal discussions of some addresses. Lieut.-Governor Kelly delivered an address before the convention.

Everyone of the speakers were of one opinion, that the needy poor were scarce, and that sickness was a great deal less that usual. The morning session was taken up with a short business session. John C. Collins, of Howard City, advocated a longer term for the county superintendents. He held that they did not have time to get acquainted with their work.

O. H. Provin, of Grand Rapids was in favor of having a special officer appointed for larger cities, claiming that the county officer was unable to give his time to this field.

Iowa Enforcee New Laws

The law enacted by the last general assembly of Iowa, prohibiting the use of intoxicating liquors and of profane and indecent language on any railway train or street car in service, is to be rigidly enforced. The new law gives conductors on railway trains authority to prevent any intoxicated person from entering any passenger or street car in service. It gives them the right to eject any such passenger from the train and give him into custody of an officer. The general manager of the Rock Island division has had placards containing a synopsis of this law posted in every waiting room and station on its line.

Attorney General Byron Preston has handed down a decision upholding the new law which provides that officials in Iowa may be removed for intoxication. In accordance with the laws the mayor Marengo has been deprived of his position.

Hon. A. C. Rankin, who has been canvassing the state for a number of years in the intrest of a state marshall law, is now engaged in leading a campaign for ex-Senator Dunham of Manchester for governor, in the interest of prohibitory amendment work. As governor of our politically entangled commonwealth, Mr. Dunham would be the right man in the right place at the right time.

State President Mrs. Etta B. Hurford is giving valiant help at district conventions throughout the state. Our Vice-president Mrs. Ida B. Wise, has dropped field work for the present and resumed her school duties in Des Monies.

In the Absence of Knowledge of Biblical Text It Was Best Cowboy Could Do.

Once upon a time, not so long ago, a couple of cowpunchers found themselves guests in the home of a minister of the gospel whose custom was to hold family worship of a morning, and to conclude the same by asking each one present to give some quotation from the Scriptures. One after another repeated some text, says Recreation, until at last it came the turn of Jim Bulstoks of the Crowfoot ranch.

"My dear young friend," said the dominie, as he saw the latter hesitating, "surely can recall some verse from the Bible."

Jim's face was bathed with perspiration, but at last there came to him some approximation of a memory of something he had read or heard at some stage of his life about the first chapter of Genesis. At last he broke out: "God made the world!"

The dominie lifted a hand to hide a sudden smile, but bowed to Jim's neighbor in the circle. Curley was even worse off than Jim had been, and for the life of him could not think of anything. At last, remembering the occasional virtue of a good bluff, he twisted one foot around his chair leg and, with all the confidence he could muster, remarked: "He shore did!"

Deadly "Carolina Tarantula" Caught by Boys on Plantation in That State.

Mr. A. W. Pickens of Garvin township brought to this office Saturday an enormous spider which he called a Carolina tarantula. It was captured by some boys on his plantation.

The spider was an inch and a half long and half an inch broad before having been killed and drawn to its smallest compass. Before being killed it was much larger. The animal was equipped with ten legs, four at the prow and six at the stern, and a particularly wicked looking mouth. The bite of this spider, Mr. Pickens says, is as deadly as that of a rattlesnake.

Some boys on Mr. Pickens' plantation found a peculiar looking hole in the ground and decided to investigate. After digging for a while they came upon an odd looking nest. Prying it open they found the spider inside. The nest was provided with a trap door, which the spider could close after himself as he went into the nest, and would be safe from intruders. Mr. Pickens brought the nest to the city with him. It was a very ingeniously contrived affair and was of almost as much interest as the spider itself.—Anderson Mail.

Miraculous Strawberry Box.

Luther Burbank, at a dinner in Santa Rosa, replied modestly with an anecdote to a eulogy of his new creation, the spineless cactus.

"Really, you know," said the plant wizard, "the spineless cactus is nothing like so marvelous as the strawberry box that the fashionable fruiterer of the east uses. That is a creation indeed!"

He smiled.

"A fashionable New York fruiterer," he said, "told his new boy one June morning to go to the back of his shop and fill a box with two-dollar grade strawberries for Mrs. Van Golde.

"The boy a moment later called from the rear:

"'Hey, there ain't enough berries here to fill this box.'

"The fruiterer hurried back himself. He looked at the box, then he sneered at the boy.

"'Why, you young greenhorn,' he said, 'you've got it upside down!'"

In the King's Name.

An odor of unconscious humor hangs about a justice of the peace of whom a Canadian contributor to the London Outlook tells.

His name was Alexander Beggs, and one day a farmer was brought up before him for allowing a cow with an infectious disease to wander at large. The magistrate promptly ordered the cow shot and fined the owner $10.

But when he filed up the conviction slip, by a slip of the pen he sentenced the owner to be shot and the cow to be fined $10. Then, as the king's direct representative, he signed it:

"Edward VII. per Alexander Beggs, J. P."

Green Tomato Mince Pies.

Four quarts of green tomatoes chopped, drain off the juice, cover with water and cook one-half hour; then drain again and add two pounds brown sugar, one pound seeded raisins, chop half of these; one cup suet, one tablespoon salt, one-half cup vinegar. Cook until thick; when cool add one teaspoon each cassia, cloves and one tablespoon grated nutmeg. These are dandy pies.

For Croup.

Lobelia is a sovereign remedy for croup. Get a small bottle of it and when a child awakes in the night with a dry, hoarse cough, which mothers who have croupy children soon learn to recognize, begin giving the lobelia in small doses until the child vomits. The druggist will tell you how to give it. Vomiting removes the mucus from the throat.

To Wash Clotheslines.

A good way to wash clotheslines is to wind them on a long board and scrub them with a scrubbing brush. You will find that in this way you keep them from getting tangled. It is so hard to wind them when you wash them in the tub.

The Man From Brodney's

"No, no! It isn't that," she said, her eyes narrowing. "Don't misinterpret my coming here to say that I will go. It isn't because—no, it isn't that!"

"I was unhappy because you had forsaken me," he said gently. "You are brave—you are wonderful! But I can't take you down there. I know what will happen if they find him guilty. Goodby, dear one. I'll come back—surely I'll come back. Thank you for sending me away happy."

"Won't you let me go with you?" she asked after a long, penetrating look into his eyes."

"I would not take you among them for all the world. You forget.' Neither of us would come back."

"Neither of us?" she said slowly.

"I wouldn't come back without you," he said quietly, earnestly. She understood. "Goodby! Don't worry about me. I am in no danger."

"Goodby," she said, the princess once more. "I shall pray for you with all my soul." She gave him her hand. It was cold and lifeless. He pressed it warmly and went quickly away, leaving her standing there in the still shade of the sadhuwoods, looking after him with eyes that grew wider and wider with the tears that welled up from behind.

Hours went by slow, torturous hours in which the souls of those who watched and waited for his return were tried to the utmost.

Once there came to the ears of the watchers on the mountain side the sound of oft and stoutly the brief rattle of firearms. The blood of every one turned cold with apprehension. Every voice was stilled, every eye wide with dread. Necmah screamed as she fled across the terrace toward the drawbridge, where Selim stood as motionless as a statue.

Launches time passed and again, as if drawn by a magnet, the entire household made its way to the front of the chateau.

At last Selim uttered a shout of joy. He forgot the deference due his betters and unceremoniously dashed off toward the gates, followed by Necmah, who seemed possessed of wings.

Chase was returning!

They saw him coming up the drive, his hat in his hand, his white umbrella raised above his head. The eager, joyous watchers saw him greet Selim and his fluttering wife. They saw Selim fall upon his knees, and they felt the tears rushing to their own eyes.

"Hurray!" shouted little Mr. Saunders in his excitement. Bowles and the three clerks joined him in the exhibition. The princess was conscious of the fact that at least five or six pairs of eyes were watching her face. She closed her lips and compelled her eyelids to obey the dictates of a resentful heart. She lowered them until they gave one the impression of indolent curiosity, even indifference. All the while her incomprehensible heart was thumping with a rapture that knew no allegiance to royal conventions.

A few minutes later he was among them, listening, with his head, half satirical smile, to their protestations of joy and relief.

"Nonsense," he exclaimed in his most deprecating voice. Taking a seat beside the princess on the railing and fanning himself lazily with his hat, to the mortification of his body servant, who waved a huge palm leaf in vigorous refutation. "It was nothing. Just begging a witness, that's all. You'll find how easy it is when you get back to London and have to testify in the Skaggs will contest. Tell the truth, that's all." The princess was now looking at his brown face with eyes over which she had lost control. "Oh, by the bye," he said, as if struck by a sudden thought, "it is my painful duty to announce to the Mesdames von Blitz that they are widows."

There was a dead silence. The three women stared up at him, uncomprehending.

"Yes," he went on solemnly, "Jacob is no more. He was found guilty by his judges and executed with commendable haste and precision. He took his medicine bravely—twelve leaden pills administered by as many skillful surgeons. But it is yet too early to congratulate yourselves on your freedom. Rasula has promised to kill all of us, whether we deserve it or not."

"They shot him?" demanded Depplingham when he had finished.

"Admirably. By Jove, those fellows can shoot! They accepted my word against his—which is most gratifying to my pride. One other man testified against him, a chap who saw him with the Boers not ten minutes before the attempt was made to rob the vaults. Rasula appeared as counsel for the defense. Merely a matter of form. He knew that he was guilty. There was no talk of a new trial; no appeal to the supreme court, Britt; no expense to the community."

He was as unconcerned about it as if discussing the most trivial happening of the day. Von Blitz lived not ten minutes after sentence was passed.

"As to their intentions toward us," said Chase, "they are firm in their determination that no one shall leave the chateau alive. Rasula was quite frank with me. He is a cool devil. He calmly notified me that we will all be dead inside of two weeks. No ships will put in here so long as the plague exists. I asked him how we were to die, and he smiled as though he was holding something back as a surprise for us. He came as near to laughing as I've ever seen him when I asked him if he'd forgotten my warships. 'Why don't you have them here?' he asked. 'We're not ready,' said I. 'The six months are not up for nine days yet.' I also made the interesting discovery that suits have already been brought in England to break the will on the grounds of insanity."

"But what good will that do us if we are to die here?" exclaimed Bobby Browne.

"None whatsoever," said Chase calmly. "You must admit, however, that you exhibited signs of hereditary insanity by coming here in the first place. I'm beginning to believe that there's a streak of it in my family too."

The princess was dismayed by her two happy Chaseburyites.

"And you—you saw him killed?" asked the princess in an awed voice, low and full of horror.

"Yes. I could not avoid it."

"They killed him on your—on your"—She could not complete the sentence, but shuddered expressively.

"Yes. He deserved death, princess. I am more or less like the Moslem in one respect. I might excuse a thief or a murderer, but I have no pity for a traitor."

"You saw him killed?" she said in the same awed voice, involuntarily drawing away from him.

"Yes," he said, "and you would have seen him killed, too, if you had gone down with me to appear against him."

She looked up quickly and then thanked him almost in a whisper.

UNIQUE GOOD ROADS MOVE.

Rural Carrier in Brenham, Tex., Forms an Association.

William Barnes, carrier for rural route No. 9, from Brenham, Tex., to Independence, is a strong good roads advocate and has some original ideas about the best way to improve the roads.

Some time ago he started an independent movement to get the people along his route to help him keep the road in good condition and asked them to form an organization, to be known as the Good Roads association of R. F. D., No. 9, and to contribute monthly dues to such an organization to maintain a team to work on this road, dragging it with a split log drag or doing such other work on it as could be done by this team, he agreeing, without compensation, to superintend the work.

He sent out circulars to all the people along his route, setting forth his plans, and asked them to join the association.

On one occasion he met a large number that live along this route at Prairie Hill. The association was organized and Mr. Barnes was elected manager, secretary and treasurer and F. W. Quebe and Carl Marens directors.

English Highway Policy.

Two points in the recently proposed British bill to provide for the economic development of the United Kingdom and the improvement of the roads thereth are worthy of notice in the United States. The program of the bill provides for special motor roads to be exclusively or chiefly for the use of motorcars, the road board having authority to improve existing roads or to construct new roads for that purpose. The board may acquire land for this purpose by right of eminent domain and may also acquire land adjacent thereto for a width 220 yards distant from the middle of the road, which land they may sell, lease or control, the increment therefrom being used for the maintenance or construction of this class of highways.

Some Good Roads Pointers.

Good roads mean as much as good crops to the farmers.

If macadam roads are to be maintained at their best, the sprinkling cart is a daily necessity.

The longer the delay in building good roads the greater the cost.

Until produce is hauled to market it isn't really produced.

If the road is poor, good horses and good vehicles count for little.

What the Press Is Doing for the Grange.

Silently and without exciting prejudice, the printed page enters our homes and exert a tremendous influence for whatever cause it espouses or opposes. The grange is now enjoying its full share of support from this source. Local papers today, almost without exception, welcome live grange copy. It was not always thus. It is the fault of the grange itself if advance notices of meetings, including what is said upon leading topics discussed do not regularly appear in their columns. The grange that systematically keeps the hopeful features of its actual work under this powerful lense does not die. It lives and grows. People flock to popular enterprises, and repeated press notices have made the grange popular in hundreds of localities. All in all, the press is the mighty ally of the grange—none more so.

The thirty-seventh session of the Michigan state grange is a case in point. Its brilliant and unprecedented success is unquestionably due to the untiring co-operation and zeal of the press of the Grand Traverse region. For a year its papers have searched the highways and byways of grange history and personalities, serving its findings in crisp, attractive form week by week. They have, besides this, set a precedent in judicious, effective grange promotion that other sections will do well to emulate and can excel only with great difficulty.

Notes of the Hog Lot.

Feed the pigs all they will eat up clean three times a day.

The hard coal ashes can be dumped into the hogpen to good advantage.

The amount of pork produced from the droppings increases with the age of the cattle.

The wise feeding of corn to the hogs will give you better profits by extra rapid growth.

The smell from the hogpen indicates pretty accurately the lack of thrift of the farmer.

Hogs like to root because it's the nature of the beast. They're built that way. Why not give them the chance?

The sow pigs should be gone over and selections made for future breeders. Pick only the biggest and most thrifty looking.

Forage Crops.

One of the greatest wastes in the feeding of hogs is the use of corn. Corn alone is not a good feed, because it is not a balanced ration. No hog grower can afford not to grow plenty of forage crops.

The Favorite of Fate.

The great specialist's patient after many weeks of treatment, says Judge, had at last been declared cured of an "incurable" disease, and, with a grateful feeling, he asked the physician the amount of his bill.

"That depends, my dear sir," said the specialist. "Whenever I treat a man I always make it a point to determine his occupation and how large a family he has to support. Then I make out my bill accordingly. May I ask what you do for a living?"

"I am a poet," replied the patient soulfully.

"In that case," said the physician, "if you will give me the money in cash now it'll be a dollar and a half."

State Game Warden Pierce has compiled his report relative to the number of game licenses issued in the state during the year just closed. It shows that 20,928 deer licenses were issued, an increase of 1,035 over the number last year, and 211 non-resident hunter's licenses were issued to hunters from nine states.

The Detroit Free Press of Saturday, contained the following: "As he was getting up yesterday morning, in his room a hotel in Port Burwell, Ont., Capt. James Reid of Sarnia, suffered a stroke of paralysis. He lost the power of speech and his left side became useless. His son, William Reid, at once left Sarnia for Port Burwell, and a specialist from Detroit has also gone to the bedside of the noted wrecker. A telephone message last night from the Reid wrecking offices in Sarnia stated that Capt. Reid was resting comfortably, and recovery is hoped for. The patient cannot be moved for a week or more.

Mr. John Corwin, an old soldier one of the early settlers of Charlevoix county, died at the home of his son in Boyne City, December 12. Mr. Corwin lived in Charlevoix for thirteen years and then moved to Iowa, but about seven years ago he came back to this country and has lived here or near here most of the time since. He was the father of seven children, all of whom except the son at whose home he died, lived in other portions of the country. One brother, William Corwin, lives at Pellston and another brother Joseph Corwin, lived at Elk Rapids. Mr. Corwin is well known and respected all about Charlevoix and Emmet counties.

every way, still they cannot endanger the home's money or property. The board wants the superintendent to step out pending the proceedings and then if he is found innocent, he will be given back his place. This Mr. Swift refuses to do, but a successor will be appointed to have charge while he is in jail. Mrs. Swift is still at the home and there are about 70 boys there.

The matter of the control of the Benlah Home funds and affairs raises an interesting question. It has been represented by Mr. Swift, it is stated, that Benlah Home was a corporation managed by a board of trustees. The funds in the bank at Boyne City, however are deposited under the name of Hermon Swift, trustee. There is about $8,000 there at present, $6,000 for a building fund and $2,000 in a running account. It is possible that Benlah Home has no legal status whatever and if this is the case and if it is true that the superintendent represented the home to be an incorporated institution while receiving contributions, then he does have personal charge of the funds and property but at the same time, he is guilty of receiving money under false pretenses.

This is a matter that interests hundreds of contributors all over the state. To this building fund, one Emmett county man alone contributed $1000, while there have been other heavy contributions. Thousands have contributed their mite either in money, food or supplies for the home.

Mr. Swift of course has not been proven guilty. In his position, he comes in contact with some of the worst boys in the world, boys who know every form of human depravity. It is within their power, if they chafe at the restraint imposed upon them, to fabricate stories that will ruin a man for life and this must be taken into consideration in viewing the matter.

Similar charges have been made against Mr. Swift in the past in different cities as well as in this county and the general opinion is that matter should be thoroughly tried out at this time, in justice to the people as well as to Mr. Swift, who maintains that he is entirely innocent of the charges brought against him.

CARE OF MILK.

Keep at a Low Temperature and Little Exposure as Possible.

An authority writes as follows: When nature instituted milk as a food she provided the manner of supplying it in such a way that it should not be exposed to external contamination. Human ingenuity has imitated the method, and when the scientist wants to secure milk in its natural state he inserts a sterilized glass tube into the teat and draws milk into a sterilized bottle.

The point of interest to the dairy farmer in this is that milk taken from a cow in this manner will usually keep fresh and sweet at room temperature for a long time if protected from later contamination. From the above one can lay down all the necessary rules for the proper handling of his product, and they may be summed up in this advice:

Do not expose milk more than is absolutely necessary. Manifestly some exposure will take place. We not only cannot do as the scientist does, but our object is not to produce sterile milk, but a marketable article that will retain its original properties for a limited period of time. In order to do this we must imitate so far as we can the method of the scientist, and the closer we attain to it the better will be the product. Even when the milk has been exposed there remains a simple and powerful corrective in keeping milk at a low temperature.

The secret of milk preservation lies in these two rules: As little exposure as possible and keeping it at a low temperature. It should be classed as a piece of good fortune that a food product of such value and widespread use can be maintained by the observance of so few and so simple precautions. If every producer can conduct his business with the knowledge and understanding that the cause of the physical and chemical changes in milk, and consequently its depreciation in value, is the result of exposure to bacterial dirt he will be forewarned and forearmed and much better qualified to work intelligently.

Exposure to bacterial dirt is occasioned by putting milk into unclean vessels, by keeping it uncovered near unclean persons or unclean animals and leaving it uncovered in unclean places. Some exposure must occur in the ordinary routine. So much is granted. But this exposure can be made as slight and as harmless and as short as possible. That is to say, milk in its passage from the cow to the consumer should enter a small number of vessels, the fewer the better. The surface it touches in these vessels should be reduced as much as can be, and the openings in these vessels should be as small as the purpose will allow. Covers should be provided.

Necessary exposure is limited to drawing milk from a clean cow with clean hands into a clean pail in a clean barn. It means straining in a clean room into a clean receiving can. Short exposure means milking quickly, straining quickly, filling vessels quickly and covering them immediately. The exposure which has resulted can be offset by cooling the milk and maintaining it at a low temperature.

The cooling of milk should be done within one hour and, if possible, immediately after being drawn from the cow. Making all due allowance for the action of the bacterial substance in milk, this is the safest procedure. This quick and continued cooling is absolutely essential for milk destined for the cities, because, as a rule, it is twelve to thirty-six hours old when delivered.

Nourishing Feed.

Good, nourishing feed is a necessity for the farm animals, and dry beds are essential to their well being.

NEW PRIMARY ELECTION LAW

Provides for the Selection of United States Senator by the people

STATEMENT ISSUED BY GOVERNOR

Points Out Sections Bearing on Choice of Candidate

Legislative Candidates Should be Chosen on Account of Fitness for Position Irrespective of their Choice for U. S. Senator.

Governor Warner has issued the following statement relative to the nomination of United States senator by direct vote at the September primary next year.

In my judgment, there is no reason why candidates for United States senator and their friends should be interested in who are nominated in the various districts for members of the legislature, except as all good citizens are interested in having capable honest members who will legislate for the best interests of the state and vote for the primary nominee for United States senator.

The primary law now in effect provides in plain terms that the candidate for United States senator receiving the highest number of votes in the primary in the whole state shall be the nominee of the party.

I am certainly at a loss to understand how any one can construe the law in any other way than that the senatorial candidate receiving the highest vote in each party in the whole state shall be the party nominee. Those representatives who state that they will be governed by the vote of their individual districts have an entirely wrong conception of the law and their duties as members of the legislature. I am in entire accord with the views expressed by Acting Chairman Miller, of the House Election Committee.

Section 10, of the primary election law, provides that a general primary election for all political parties shall be held the first Tuesday after the first Monday of September preceeding every general November election, at which time the enrolled voters of each political party shall vote for party candidates for the office of Governor, Lieutenant Governor and United States Senator. Of course this section contains the provisions that no nomination for the office of United States Senator shall be made unless there is to be a senator elected at the next session of the legislature.

Section 38, of the act, provdies that the candidates of each political party for nomination for any office who receives the greatest number of votes cast for candidates for any such office as determined by a board of canvassers shall be declared the nominee of that political party for said office at the next ensuing November election or at the next city election or at the next election for United States Senator as the case may be.

The section further provides that the Board of Canvassers shall certify such nomination to the respective Boards of Election Commissioners and also provides that in the case of a candidate for the office of United States senator the Board of State Canvassers shall forthwith certify the result of the formal election to the Secretary of State who, in turn, has to certify said result to the next succeeding legislature on the first day of the session.

I believe that each and every candidate for United States Senator should make his position clearly understood upon the matter. Of course the method of electing United States Senators cannot be changed by the law making body of any one state. But the result of this primary election should be just as binding upon members of the legislature as though it was provided for by the federal constitution. Neither should there be any doubt about the position of prospective candidates for the legislature. Their constituents have a right to know that they will carry out the plain provisions of the law. They should be selected because of their fitness for general legislative duties and their individual choice for United States Senator should not be a factor in their selection.

Grand New Year's Ball and Concert.

The Charlevoix City Band will give a concert of one hour at the Charlevoix theater Friday evening, December 31, and will dance the "Old Year Out," and the "New Year In." The price of the dance will be fifty cents a couple and as the concert is given to fill the gallery, fifteen cents admission will be charged adults and ten cents for children. The thirty-one members of the band heartily request your attendance, if not more than to the gallery. They need your support.

Mrs. J. S. Baker has resigned her office as business manager of the band, owing to the fact she does not have the time to do the soliciting, etc., properly, but at the same time, Mrs. Baker urges the COURIER to state that she will give them a hearty financial support and other help as she has in the past.

Considerable expense is gone too by the band to give their dance and as they are showing the public the right spirit and are helping themselves by such means as dances and concert entertainments, the people of Charlevoix, young and old should turn out to their support.

NORTHERN APPLES

What an Apple Merchant Thinks of Michigan Orchards

This State is Much Nearer the Eastern Markets Than the West—Should Take Advantage.

The Produce News, published in Chicago, in a recent issue points out that the only large market for Oregon and Washington apples is in the eastern states and that the Michigan apple region is much nearer this eastern market than the western states. It speaks of Benjamin Newhall and his Michigan orchard, which, by the way, is on North Manitou island.

This is what the News says about Mr. Newhall:

"Benjamin Newhall, the retired apple merchant, owns a big place in Northern Michigan and has planted a large apple orchard on it. He is interested in a scheme to reclaim Michigan apple orchards, and when talking to a representative of The News about the western craze, said that there are more apple trees in Michigan than in all the west, and that all of them are in bearing condition, but only a trifling percentage of them were well cared for and produced good fruit.

Mr. Newhall claims that the neglected Michigan orchards can be secured for a small part of what western orchards cost, and that with the freight rates in favor of Michigan, more profit could be secured from land in that state than in the northwest. A comparatively small outlay is needed to bring orchards in good condition. Mr. Newhall predicts that people will know this shortly, and that the eastern apple states will become more prominent supplying the east with the bulk of its fruit."

An Unusual Opportunity For the Farmer's Son.

There are some young men on Michigan farms who for one reason or another were unable to complete public or high-school courses and who have not been brought in touch with Agricultural College teachings or Experiment Station investigations. The time comes in every young man's life when he is disinclined to go back to the unfinished school work and he realizes his lack of preparation to enter a college or university. The Michigan Agricultural College is endeavoring to meet this need by offering six short courses for farmers' sons and others during the winter season when farm operations are not pressing. The work given is also useful to those reared in cities or trained for scientific or professional pursuits, who desire to engage in agricultural pursuits.

Last year over two hundred men and women were registered in these courses. In the same classes were to be found the farm hand and the capitalist; side by side were sixteen year old youths and men whose hair was tinged with gray; the university graduate was there also. As the object is to teach practical agriculture, wide variation in preparatory training of the individuals of a class does not present the insurmountable barrier that would arise in connection with purely scientific or classical training. No entrance examinations are required. Anyone who can read and write ought to derive some benefit.

The following are the subjects included in the First-year General Agriculture; viz: Stock Judging, Carpentry and Blacksmithing, Veterinary Science, Soils and Crops, Stock Feeding, Fruit Growing and Vegetable Gardening, Business Arithmetic, Book-keeping and Correspondence. The Second-year general Agriculture includes advanced work in some of the subjects named with Dairying, Farm Engineering, Concrete Work and Agricultural Chemistry and Soil Physics in addition. The courses in Creamery Management, Cheese Making, Poultry and Forestry are equally well suited in their arrangement.

Eight hours constitutes the prescribed day's work, at least half of which is spent in training the hand and eye, in addition to the mind, in shop and laboratory. A large, well equipped library and reading room is available when classes are not in progress.

These courses all begin January 1, 1910, except the cheese course which begins six weeks later.

The COURIER will continue to do its best to serve its readers still better in the year to come. DEWITT C. LEACH DEAD

One Time Prominent Resident of Grand Traverse Region

Built State Road from Traverse City to Charlevoix—Filled Many Important Offices.

DeWitt C. Leach, the only living member of the constitutional convention of 1850 and forty years ago one of the most prominent residents of Michigan, died at his home in Springfield, Missouri, last week.

Mr. Leach was born in Erie county, New York, in 1822 and came to Michigan when a young man. In 1849 he was elected to the Michigan legislature on the Anti-slavery and Whig tickets and was elected to the Constitutional convention by the same party in 1850. In 1853 he was appointed state librarian by Governor Bingham, serving as private secretary to the governor during the recesses of the legislature. He was the first editor of the Lansing Republican and in 1855 was elected to Congress from the fourth district which comprised all the lower peninsula north of Pontiac and all the upper peninsula. He was re-elected in 1858 and declined a re-nomination in 1860.

In 1861 he was appointed Indian agent for Michigan, serving four years and moving with his family to Traverse City in 1865. In 1867 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention of that year. Mr. Leach built the state road from Traverse City to Charlevoix. In 1867 Mr. Leach bought the Grand Traverse Herald, selling it to the present owner in 1876 and removing to Springfield, Missouri, where he resided until his death.

RICE---INGALLS

Prominent Young People of Marion Married Thursday.

About fifty invited guests gathered at the pleasant farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ingalls of Marion township on Thursday evening, December 23, to participate in joyous wedding festivities, the occasion being the marriage of their eldest daughter, Anna Gertrude, to Fred J. Rice, both of whom are very estimable and popular young people. At 7:30 p. m. while the strains of the wedding march were being played by Mrs. Frank Smith, accompanied by Frank Smith on the violin, the bridal party, consisting of the officiating clergyman, the bride and groom, Sam and Miss Bessie Straw as attendants, took their places underneath an arch of green and white from which was suspended a large white bell. Here a very impressive ring ceremony was spoken by Rev. F. Dewey Ehle, which made two hearts one.

After congratulations and good cheer the guests were seated and partook of a bountiful wedding supper prepared by the hostess and served by several of her intimate friends. The newly wedded pair were the receipients of many beautiful and useful presents, expressive of the esteem of their many friends, all of whom wish them a long and pleasant voyage together. After a wedding trip of a week or two they will be at home in their new residence on the Ingalls homestead. The COURIER extends its best wishes.

WAS SQURREL HUNTER

Hon. A. J. Stroud Receives Payment for War Services

Was a Member of Brave Band Formed to Resist Morgan

Columbus, Ohio, Dec. 1st, 1909.
Mr. A. J. Stroud,
Horton Bay, Charlevoix Co., Mich.
Dear Sir:

Please find enclosed Warrant No. 1051, on the Treasurer of the State, payable to your order for Thirteen ($13.00) Dollars, being amount due you from Squirrel Hunter Claims.

I have the honor to be,
Yours very truly,
E. M. Fullington,
Auditor of State.

Hon. A. J. Stroud of Horton's Bay is very proud over the above letter and a draft that he recently received from the Auditor's Department of the state of Ohio.

At one time during the Civil War there was great fear that Morgan's men would come up the Ohio River and make raids on property near Cincinnati. At that time much excitement prevailed among the northern sympathizers and the boys in the neighborhood banded together into a company that was about one thousand strong, armed themselves with old shot guns, squirrel rifles, horse pistols and any kind of weapons that could be secured. They encamped on the bank of the Ohio River and patiently awaited the raider. Morgan, however, did not come their way, and after being encamped for about a month they disbanded and were given discharges by the Department.

The State of Ohio has always been very proud of the loyalty shown by these young men and a short time ago appropriated enough money to pay these boys for their servive which lasted one month. The appropriation was made for the benefit of the "squirrel hunters," for that was the name given the boy soldiers.

The check referred to above is a check for thirteen dollars, issued to Mr. Stroud in payment for his services and in recognition of his bravery.

Some time ago the Judge noticed something in a newspaper about the Squirrel Hunters fund having been appropriated and casually mentioned the fact to L. F. Knowles with the announcement that he was one of the original squirrel hunters. The result was that Knowles took the matter up with the foregoing result.

OVER THREE MILLION DOLLARS

Paid Western Michigan Growers for Fruit this Season

RAILROAD FIGURES ARE NOW ALL IN

10,000 Carloads Handled by Two Railroads

Which Were Valued at $3,053,975—Boat Lines Handled a Vast Amount Also—An Industry Which is Rapidly Growing.

Uncle Jim Hill for the last year or more has been sounding his slogan, "Back to the Soil," and while his meaning is somewhat different from that of the practical fruit growers of the Grand Rapids district, they have been warmly seconding the efforts of the great developer of the northwest by citing facts and figures showing that fruit culture along systematic lines offers about as fine inducements as any reasonable man could ask.

Last week the Michigan Central announced its figures for the fruit movement this year, showing the remarkable increase in traffic on this account over anything the road had previously experienced. This in bushels, barrels and carloads made a notable showing. The other great road concerned with this fruit handling did not have its figures at hand at the time of the announcements. It is now available, but is not classified as was that of the Michigan Central. The total number of carloads moved by the Pere Marquette during the current year to date was 6,889, of which amount 4,421 was during the months of September, October and November. This is the fruit season in western Michigan and these are the figures which will be considered. These figures, moreover, are for the western Michigan district, while some of the Michigan Central figures contemplate the state at large. Outside of the western Michigan belt, though, there was little fruit moved and for all practical purposes the total number of carloads, 4,500, may be credited to this portion of the state.

Classified, the Michigan Central handled 1,200 carloads of apples of an average of 175 barrels to the car and at $2 a barrel, a conservative average price to the grower, this gives $350 a car or a total of $420,000. All the prices are conservately estimated and are those paid the grower. Of peaches, the road handled 150 carloads at $137.50 a car, a total of $65,625. Grapes with 2,800 carloads, were the big item and at $320 the car aggregated $869,000. Of pears there were fifty carloads at $400 a car and a total of $20,000, while 200 carloads of mixed fruit, quinces, plums and cherries at $525 a car, gave a total of $105,000. The grand total for this line is $1,500,625.

With the Pere Marquette the chief movement was in peaches, although the road like its competitor handled a lot of grapes, apples and other fruits. Taking the 4,421 carloads moved in the regular fall season at $350 a carload for the average price and which is decidely low in view of the known figures previously cited, the fruit this road moved represented payment to the growers of $1,547,350. Added to the other figures here is a general total of $3,053,975, which the growers of western Michigan received for their fruit this year.

The other railroads moved some fruit while a lot of the products went across the lake by boat. The returns from these are not available but it is safe to say the total amount paid growers was $1,500,000 which rather demonstrate the assertion of Robert D. Graham that systematic fruit growing is an industry.—Grand Rapids Press.

FORESTS FOR UNCLE SAM.

Gifts to Enable the Government to Save Big Trees.

One of the most public spirited gifts ever made to the government came during the year from William Kent of Chicago, who has deeded to the United States 295 acres of primeval redwood forest on the southern slope of Mount Tamalpais, about six miles from the city of San Francisco. This grove is one of few remaining tracts of redwood forest to be found in its natural state in California. At the request of Mr. Kent it will be called the Muir woods, in honor of John Muir, the noted naturalist. The destruction of redwood by lumbering has been very rapid during the last decade. The large timber in the Muir woods has escaped the ax partly because of its location and partly because the former owners of the tract have protected it. Now that the gift has been accepted by the government under authority of the law which provides that objects of scientific interest may be declared national monuments the woods will be perpetuated. No other redwood tract in the state of California is so easily accessible to so many people. Its great educational value together with the fact that it is a pleasure ground for all those who live in or visit this part of California, makes the woods an ideal national monument. By an act of congress passed Feb 18, 1909, a way was found to save for all time one of the most famous groves of trees in the world the Calaverns big tree grove of California. For more than nine years the people of California, particularly the 500 women of the California club, have been working to interest the government in protecting the big trees from destruction. The act finally passed by congress, provides for the acquisition of the grove by an exchange which will give its former owner stumpage or other forest lands owned by the government in place of the timber in the grove. No appropriation is needed to carry out the act.

FOREST TO BE ACQUIRED BY GOVERNMENT

The land to be acquired under the act includes 4340 acres, of which 960 acres, known as the north grove, are in Calaverns county, and 3,040, known as the south grove, are in Tuolumne county. There are 1,380 big trees in the grove, not counting specimens less than six feet in diameter. Besides the big trees, whose scientific name is Sequoia Washingtonia, there are hundreds of sugar and yellow pines ranging in the height of 275 feet and often having a diameter of eight or ten feet, as well as many white firs and incense cedars.

In the north grove there are ten trees each of which is over twenty-five feet in diameter and more than seventy from fifteen to twenty-five feet in diameter.

Picking and Packing Apples.

The harvest of the apple is here and, with exception for some weeks there are some suggestions that may assist the growers.

Pick into baskets. They should be about half bushel and round, with drop handles. The baskets should be smooth on the inside—that is, free from strips around the inside or bottom, lined with burlap to prevent bruising, and a short iron hook should be attached to the handle to suspend the basket from the limbs, so as to enable the picker to use both hands.

The great advantage in using the basket lies largely in the fact that it the apples are carefully placed in the same they are not bruised

Apples picked from the table and immediately placed in cold storage (if they are to be put into cold storage) will give by far the better results. This method adds two to four months to the keeping qualities of the fruit. You cannot afford to let your fruit lie under the trees or in a building for two or three weeks before you barrel.

Fruit grown in a warm latitude or harvested during a warm September or October must be quickly handled. But when properly handled at picking time there will not be much room for complaint. A good barrel is essential if you wish to store your fruit, have it keep well and sell. A tight barrel is the best, and the better it is made the better results you will have. There will be less loss from shrinkage of fruit, from rats and mice and other causes.

In hauling barreled apples to the car and in shipping lay the barrels on the side. Never stand them on end if you wish the fruit to remain tight in the barrels.

I have several good houses and lots in the city of Charlevoix, to trade for farms.

CHAPTER XXVI.

CENTURIES TO FORGET.

"My lord," said Saunders the next day, appearing before his lordship after an agitated hour of preparation, "it's come to a point where something's got to be done." He got that far and then turned quite purple. His collar seemed to be choking him: "If what Mr. Chase says is true, we've got a precious short time to live. Well, we've—we've concluded to get all we can out of the time that's left, my lord. So I've come to ask if it will be all right with you and her ladyship, sir. We don't want to do anything that would seem forward and out of place, sir."

"It's very considerate of you, Saunders, but what the devil are you talking about?"

"Miss—Miss Pelham and I have decided to get—er—get married before it is too late."

Deppingham stared hard for a moment and then grinned broadly.

"You mean before you die?"

"That's it exactly, my lord. Haw, haw! It would be a bit late, wouldn't it, if we waited till afterward. Haw, haw! Splendid! So I have come to ask if you think it will interfere with your arrangements if—if we should be married tonight?"

"I'm sure, Saunders, that it won't discommode me in the least," said his lordship gentlly. "By all means, Saunders, let it be tonight, for tomorrow we may die."

"Will you kindly speak to her ladyship, sir?"

"Gladly. And I'll take it as an honor if you will permit me to give away the bride."

"Thank you, my lord," cried Saunders, his face beaming. His lordship shook hands with him, whereupon his cup of happiness overflowed, notwithstanding the fact that his honeymoon was likely to be of scarcely any duration whatsoever.

The wedding took place that night in the little chapel. Chase deliberately took possession of the princess after the hollow wedding supper had come to an end. Her mood had changed. Now she was quite at ease with him. The taunting gleam in her eyes presaged evil moments for his peace of mind.

"I'm inspired," he said to her. "A wedding always inspires me."

"It's very strange that you've never married," she retorted. She was striding freely by his side, confident in her power to resist sentiment with mockery.

"Will you be my wife?" he asked abruptly. She caught her breath before laughing tolerantly and then looked into his eyes with a tantalizing ingenuousness.

"By no means," she responded. "I am not oppressed by the same views that actuated Miss Pelham. You see, Mr. Chase, I am quite confident that we are not to die in two weeks."

"I could almost wish that we could die in that time," he said.

"How very diabolical!"

"It may seem odd to you, but I'd rather see you dead than married to Prince Karl." She was silent. He went on, "Would you consent to be my wife if you felt in your heart that we should never leave this island?"

"I think I shall go in, Mr. Chase," she said, with a warning shake of her head.

"Don't, please! I'm not asking you to marry me if we should leave the island. You must give me credit for that," he argued whimsically.

"Ah, I see," she said, apparently very much relieved. "You want me only with the understanding that death should be quite close at hand to relieve you. And if I were to become your wife, here and now, and we should be taken from this dreadful place—what then?"

"You probably would have to go through a long and miserable career as plain Goodwife Chase," he explained.

"If it will make you any happier," she said, with a smile in which there lurked a touch of mischievous triumph, "I can say that I might consent to marry you if I were not so positive that I will leave the island soon. You seem to forget that my uncle's yacht is to call here, even though your cruisers will not."

"I'll risk even that," he maintained stoutly.

She stopped suddenly, her hand upon his arm.

"Do you really love me?" she demanded earnestly.

"With all my soul. I swear to you," he replied, staggered by the abrupt change in her manner.

"Then don't make it any harder for me," she said. "You know that I could not do what you ask. Please, please be fair with me. I can't even jest about it. It is too much to ask of me," she went on, with a strange firmness in her voice. "It would require centuries to make me forget that I am a princess, just as centuries were taken up in creating me what I am. I am no better than you, dear, but—but—you understand?" She said it so pleadingly, so hopelessly, that he understood what it was that she could not say to him. "We seldom, if ever, marry the men whom God has made for us to love."

He lifted her hands to his breast and held them there. "If you will just go on loving me I'll some day make you forget you're a princess." She smiled and shook her head. Her hair gleamed red and bronze in the kindly light; a soft perfume came up to his nostrils.

* * * * * * * *

The next day three of the native servants became violently ill, seized by the most appalling convulsions. At first a thrill of horror ran through the chateau. The plague—the plague in reality!

But these fears were quickly dissipated. The sufferers soon began to mend. By nightfall they were fairly well recovered. The mysterious seizure, however, was unexplained. Chase alone divined the cause. Poison! He was sure of it! But who the poisoner?

All previous perils and all that the future seemed to promise were forgotten in the startling discovery that came with the fall of night.

Lady Deppingham and Robert

"Von Blitz's powder kegs did all this."

Browne were missing! They had disappeared as if swallowed by the earth itself! Neenah, the wife of Selim, was the last of those in the chateau to see the heirs. They crossed the swift torrent by the narrow bridge at the base of the cliff and stopped below the mouth of the cavern which blew its cool breath out upon the hanging garden. Later on she saw them climb the stanch ladder and stand in the black opening, apparently enjoying the cooling wind that came from the damp bowels of the mountain. Her attention was called elsewhere, and that was the last glimpse she had of the two people whom centered the struggle for untold riches.

"Chase, they are lost in there!" groaned Deppingham, numb with apprehension. He was trembling like a leaf.

"There's just one thing to do," said Chase. "We've got to explore that cavern to the end. They may have lost their bearings and strayed off into one of the lateral passages."

"I—I can't bear the thought of her wandering about in that horrible place," Deppingham cried as he started resolutely toward the ladder.

"She'll come out of it all right," said Chase, a sudden compassion in his eyes.

Drusilla Browne was standing nearby, cold and silent with dread, a set expression in her eyes. Her lips moved slowly, and Deppingham heard the bitter words: "You will find them, Lord Deppingham. You will find them!"

He stopped and pressed his hand over his eyes. Then, without a word, he snatched a rifle from the hands of one of the patrol and led the way up the ladder. Chase turned to the white faced princess and said between his teeth:

"If Skaggs and Wyckholme had been in the employ of the devil himself they could not have foreseen the result of their infernal plotting. I am afraid—mortally afraid!"

"Take care of him, Hollingsworth," she whispered shudderingly.

"Goodby, for yes my princess," said Chase softly and then went on with Britt and Selim. As he passed Drusilla he seized her hand and paused long enough to say:

"It's all right, little woman, take my word for it. If I were you, I'd cry. You'll see things differently through your tears."

The four men, with their lights, vanished from sight a few moments later. Chase grasped Deppingham's arm and held him back, gravely suggesting that Selim should lead the way.

They were to learn the truth almost before they had fairly begun their investigations.

The heirs already were in the hands of their enemies, the Islanders!

The eager searchers, shouting as they went, had come to what was known as the "cathedral." This was a wide, lofty chamber, hung with dripping stalactites, far below the level at which they began the descent. The floor was almost as flat and even as that of a modern dwelling. Here the cavern branched off in three or four directions, like the tentacles of a monster devilfish, the narrow passages leading no one knew whither in that tombike mountain.

Selim uttered the first shout of surprise and consternation. An instant later they were standing at the edge of a vast hole in the floor—newly made and pregnant with disaster.

A current of air swept up into their faces. The soft, loose earth about the rent in the floor was covered with the prints of naked feet; the bottom of the hole was packed down in places by a multitude of tracks. Chase's bewildered eyes were the first to discover the presence of loose, scattered masonry in the pile below, and the truth dawned upon him sharply. He gave a loud exclamation and then dropped lightly into the shallow hole.

"I've got it!" he shouted, stooping to peer intently ahead. "Von Blitz's powder kegs did all this. The secret passage runs along here. One of the discharges blew this hole through the roof of the passage. Here are the walls of the passage. By heaven, the way is open to the sea!"

"My God, Chase!" cried Deppingham, staggering toward the opening. "These footprints are— They've murdered her! They've come in here and surprised"—

"Go easy, old man! We need to be cool now. It's all as plain as day to me. Rasula and his men were exploring the passage after the discovery of the treasure chests. They came upon this new made hole and then crawled into the cavern. They surprised Browne and— Yes, here are the prints of a woman's shoe—and a man's too. They are gone. God help 'em!"

Signs of a fierce struggle were found near the entrance to the cathedral. Bobby Browne had made a gallant fight. Blood stains marked the smooth floor and walls, and there was evidence that a body had been dragged across the chamber.

Britt put his hand over his eyes and shuddered. "They've settled this contest, Chase, forever!" he groaned.

CHAPTER XXVII.

DEPPINGHAM sprang to his feet with a fierce oath on his lips. His usually inscrutable eyes were gleaming with something more than despair. There was the wild light of unmistakable relief in them. It was as if a horrid doubt had been sealed from the soul of Lady Deppingham's husband.

"We must follow!" shouted his lordship, preparing to lower him self into the jagged opening. "We may be in time!"

"Stop, Deppingham!" cried Chase, leaping to his side. "Don't go blindly into a trap like that. They've got an hour or more start of us. Nothing will be accomplished by rushing into an ambush. They'd kill us like rats. Rasula is a sagacious scoundrel. He'll not take the entire responsibility. There will be a council of all the head men. It will be of no advantage to them to kill the heirs unless they are sure that we won't live to tell the tale. They will go slow now that they have the chief obstacles to victory in their hands."

"If they will give her up to me I will guarantee that Lady Agnes shall relinquish all claim to the estate," announced the harassed husband.

"They won't do that, old man. Promises won't tempt them," protested Chase. "We've got to do what we can to rescue them. I'm with you, gentlemen, in the undertaking—first, for humanity's sake; second, because I am your friend; last, because I don't want my clients to lose all chance of winning out in this controversy by acting like confounded asses. It isn't what Sir John expects of me."

In the meantime the anxious coterie in the chateau were waiting eagerly for the return of the searchers. Drusilla made one remark, half unconsciously, no doubt, that rasped in the ears of the princess for days. It was the cold, bitter, resigned epitome of the young wife's thoughts:

"Robert has loved her for months." That was all.

Mr. and Mrs. Saunders, thankful that something had happened to divert attention from their own conspicuous plight, were discoursing freely in the center of a group composed of the four Englishmen from the bank.

"It's a plain out and out elopement," said Mrs. Saunders, fanning herself vigorously.

"But, my dear," expostulated her husband, blushing vividly over the first public use of the appellation, "where the devil could they elope to?"

"I don't know, Tommy, but elopers never take that into consideration. Do they, Mr. Bowles?"

At last the four men appeared in the mouth of the cavern. The watchers below fell into chilled silence when they discovered that the missing ones were not with them. Stupefied with apprehension, they watched the men descend the ladder and cross the bridge.

"They are dead," fell from Drusilla Browne's lips. She swayed for an instant and then sank to the ground unconscious.

* * * * * * * *

In the conference which followed the return of the searchers it was settled that three of the original party should undertake the further prosecution of the hunt for the two heirs. Lord Deppingham found ready volunteers in Chase and the faithful Selim. They prepared to go out in the hills before the night was an hour older. Selim convinced Chase that the wily Rasula would carry his captives to the mines, where he was in full power.

"You're right, Selim. If he's tried that game we'll beat him at it. Ten to one if he hasn't already chucked them into the sea they're now confined in one of the mills over there."

They were ready to start in a very short time. Selim carried a quantity of food and a small supply of brandy. Each was heavily armed and prepared for a stiff battle with the abductors.

"We seem constantly to be saying goodby to each other." Thus spoke the princess to Chase as he stood at the top of the steps waiting for Selim. The darkness hid the wan, despairing smile that gave the lie to her sprightly words.

"And I'm always doing the unexpected thing—coming back. This time I may vary the monotony by failing to return."

"I should think you could vary it more pleasantly by not going away," she said. "You will be careful?"

"The danger is here, not out there," he said meaningly.

"You mean me? But, like all danger, I soon shall pass. In a few days I shall say goodby forever and sail away."

Bran New Stock of Cutters and Sleighs on Hand

I am making a new sleigh with a new kind of cast knee, invented by myself. All other makes of sleighs have two large holes through the runner which makes the runner very weak in the center, where they are most apt to break. My new sleigh has no hole through the runner and it makes the sleigh much stronger and better. I have all sizes now on hand. Before buying, call and see them and get my prices on cutters and sleighs. I also handle all kinds of farm implements. I have the agency for the Superior drill, the best drill ever sold in Charlevoix. Remember the old stand. First-class horseshoeing and general repairing.

NEXT Tuesday night the Board of Commerce will make another attempt to hold an annual meeting, something they have been attempting to do for the past two years. We sincerely hope that this will be more than an attempt and that the members will turn out and be present and if they have any grievances be there and air them and give everybody the benefit of their ideas of how best we can, by all working together, advance the interests of our city. For ourselves we believe that the good work which has been done by the West Michigan Development Bureau in advertising the agricultural possibilities of Charlevoix county should be followed up and if some of the energy and push which has been devoted to chasing up what has turned out to be air castles, through no fault of the officers of the board, was put into keeping our farming interests to the front, more hearty co-operation could be secured in the other plans of the board. What the people want is results.

Effects of Alcohol and Tobacco on the Body.

Alcohol is a poison. It is made from the juice of grapes, apples, etc. When the juice ferments or "works," the sugar which it contains changes into alcohol. Brandy, whiskey, rum and gin, which are called distilled liquors, are about half alcohol.

Tobacco is a native of the new world, and though now grown almost everywhere, was not known till the discovery of America. The most important is the Virginian tobacco plant from three to six feet high, with large lance-shaped leaves. When it is ripe the stalks are cut and hung to dry in tobacco houses. In about twelve weeks the tobacco is cured. It is then stripped from the stalks and the leaves tied in bunches called hands and stacked in piles.

Alcohol when taken into the body poisons the whole system and prevents every organ and tissue from doing its work properly. Alcohol is indigestible, it stimulates the glands so they cannot secrete the proper amount of juice and the food is not mixed properly with the juices. The stomach becomes wrinkled and the mucous membrane becomes white and thickened or soft and covered with a secretion.

The alcohol is absorbed by the intestines and taken to all parts of the body by the blood. The presence of the alcohol in the blood separates the plasma and increases carbon and hydrogen and contains less oxygen and but little fibrin which keeps the blood from coagulating. The heart beats are irregular and the blood is not sent with the right force through the body. The arteries become enlarged and are in the state of fatty degeneration.

Alcohol has a strong affinity for nervous tissue, therefore the nervous system is very much affected.

It does the most harm to the cerebro spinal system which consists of the brain, spinal cord and nerves. The cerebellum become hardened by its use, and the spaces filled with a watery fluid. The cerebal arteries are in a state of fatty degeneration. There is a confusion in the mind, loss of memory, self control and moral power. All manners or pride seems forgotten and men become more like animals. There is an uncertainty of speech and all the special senses are effected. There is an imparied vision and taste buds are becomed imflamed. The food [illegible] has no taste. The eustachian tube becomes dry which causes deafness.

Alcohol does not increase muscular energy. The muscles are weakened and cannot do their work properly. No school boy or college student can gain a place in any athletic team if he uses alcohol.

The lungs are weakened by the use of alcohol. The alcohol reaches them by the means of the blood. At one time alcohol was supposed to be a cure for consumption but it is found that instead, consumption is often formed from the use of alcohol. The throat and larynx become inflamed and the person using alcohol is liable to colds, thus showing that it is not a cure for colds.

The temperature raises when the alcohol is first taken into the body and then drops, where it remains for some time.

Besides the direct effects of alcohol on the body, alcohol is the means of separating families and the means of poverty and crime. The price of one drink would buy bread.

Tobacco effects the body in some ways similiar to alcohol. It is used in two ways, chewing and smoking, though chewing is the worst. In chewing the salivary glands are kept in constant action which is not natural and the saliva is used then and there is not enough to digest the food at meal time. The juice of tobacco is swallowed and absorbed by the intestines and carried to all parts of the body by the blood, thus poisoning the whole system.

Smoking is often the means of forming the drinking habit, for the mouth and throat becomes so dry that water seems to weak to stop the thirst so alcohol is taken.—Also the opium habit is often formed from smoking. The leaves of the tobacco may only be dampened with the weak juice of the poppy but it is enough. Tobacco also weakens the mind as alcohol does. The scholar that uses it does not get along so well as the one that does not use it and it is best to abstain from the use of either alcohol or tobacco for they are of no help and are of a harm.

A Man and His Room.

"Play cards with a man for an hour and you will know him better than if you had met him in the drawing room every evening for a year," says a German writer. But Soulu in the Paris Figaro suggests another character barometer. A never failing test is the hotel room. The way a man arranges his room in a hotel shows whether he has been well reared, what his ideas of propriety are, whether his bump of order has been developed, whether he is methodical or slovenly, and one may even know by the way wearing apparel, ornaments and baggage are disposed of in a room which the occupant knows he will remain in only a few days whether he is thoroughly or superficially educated. "If I had a daughter for whom a young man sued," says Soulu, "I would have him go to a summer resort where I could surprise him in his hotel room. In less than fifteen minutes my verdict would be rendered on the basis of the room's appearance."

QUARTERS FOR THE FLOCK

To keep healthy and thrive sheep should be provided with quarters suitable to their needs. It is essential that their quarters be separate from other stock. Sheep prefer seclusion from other farm animals. They get along with young calves probably better than with any other stock. In discussing this phase of flock management Professor Henry says:

"Above every other animal on the farm, the sheep to be profitable must be kept dry as to coat and feet. Inattention to either of these essentials will result disastrously. With dry quarters sheep will stand a considerable degree of cold without inconvenience. Indeed, their quarters should not be as warm as for other animals. One thickness of closely matched boards will make the barn or shed where the sheep are confined sufficiently warm in the northern states except for winter lambs. Ventilation is of great importance and should be ample, care being taken to avoid direct drafts.

"The amount of space provided for each sheep will vary with the size of the animal. A ewe weighing 100 pounds will require about ten square feet of ground space, while one weighing 150 pounds should have about fifteen square feet. A space 40 by 40 feet square will therefore accommodate about 160 sheep weighing 100 pounds each or 100 weighing 150 pounds each, not allowing for feed racks. Provide fifteen inches running length of feed rack for each sheep weighing 100 pounds and two feet for those weighing 200 pounds."

A shed open to the south on well drained ground and not over twenty feet wide makes an ideal place for sheep. It also makes a very satisfactory place to care for the lambs when they come. Pens can easily be made by the use of panels or hurdles.

Provide wide, shallow troughs for feeding that can be cleaned regularly. Don't expect the lambs, whether range or native, to do well unless they have clean food and clean water as well. Salt is also valuable in getting the lambs started on grain, and it should be given throughout the feeding period and always regularly.

The most successful lamb feeder is the man who studies the needs of the lambs closest. In short, this requires that a man love to be among them, treat them kindly always and be ready to give intelligent attention to their needs at all times.

Getting the lambs on a grain ration is the most critical period, and a close watch should be kept. It has been said that lambs are the poor man's friends, but this does not imply that they can be fed and finished on a field of weeds and an occasional feed of grain. The better the grazing and the more select the ration the better price the lambs will bring on the market.

Sheep pay for extra care expended on them as well as any other kind of animals. They respond to feed and good management in a way that is pleasing to every observing person and thereby keep more vigorous and healthy and produce more wool and stronger, finer lambs.

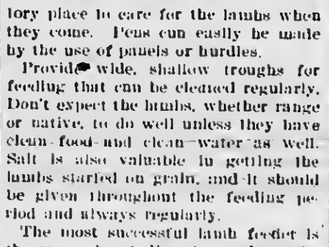
PROTECTION FOR SHEEP.

The Attack From Dogs Is Injurious and Detor ental in Many Ways.

An expert on the subject writes as follows:

"While the loss from dogs is reported as comparatively small, the nuisance is nevertheless a great detriment to the sheep industry in many sections. The direct loss from severe chasing and worrying is often not so great as the loss that follows. Breeding ewes that have been badly worried and frightened rarely, if ever, entirely recover. The result is usually weak and inferior lambs at the next lambing season, with some abortions and many abnormal presentations of the fetus. In fact, many breeders of registered sheep consider their breeding flock almost ruined after having been severely chased by dogs. Frequently a large number of ewes will not breed for some time after being chased and badly frightened."

The remedy for this nuisance is, of course, an efficient dog law rigidly enforced. In the absence of this legal protection resort may be had to dog proof fences and like means of protection. At best, however, such fences are expensive. A dog proof fence constructed at the experiment station at a cost of 65 cents per rod is described as follows:



DOG PROOF FENCE.

Cents.
Red cedar posts, each 17½
Woven wire fence, per rod 37½
Four barbed wires, per rod 15
Total 65

The 2 by 4 scantling costs about $18 per thousand and adds about a cent per rod to cost of the fence.

Any other closely constructed fence would answer the same purpose.

An Explanation.

Funston—See here, old chap, what do you mean by taking my jokes and passing them off as your own? Funston—Well, you see, it's this way—I'm a good natured sort of fellow and don't mind taking a joke from a friend.—Exchange.

The woven wire fence consists of seventeen horizontal wires, the three lower wires one and one-half inches apart, the width between wires gradually increasing to five inches at top. The vertical stays are six inches apart. The wire is fastened to posts set twenty-five feet apart, the bottom wire being three inches from the ground. One barbed wire is set midway between the bottom horizontal wire and the ground. One barbed wire is fastened to the posts three inches higher than the top wire. Two barbed wires are attached eight inches apart to pieces of 2 by 4 scantling nailed to the posts above the wire with twenty penny nails. These pieces are set outward and upward with the posts.

Neighborhood Notes

It looks like the automobile had come to stay when 32 new companies have been formed in Michigan since January 1, 1909, to manufacture them, and 52 new companies organized during same period to build automobile parts. The total capitalization of these automobile companies is $15,423,000 and for the manufacture of portions of the cars is $680,000, according to figures furnished by the secretary of state.

State Oil Inspector F. S. Neal states that the record of net profits of last year of $11,765,000 to the state for inspecting oils and gasoline, will be beat by over $1,000 this year, in spite of a previous report sent out that it would be under. At that time it was stated that $8,000 net profit was turned over to the state, but it was not stated that the end of the year is still a few months off.

December 11, Mr. Neal sent in another $2,000 to the state, which brings the total up to $10,000 turned over, and Mr. Neal believes that the amount will possibly be over the $13,000 mark this year.

State Superintendent of Public Instruction Wright has recieved information to the effect that a township treasurer in Gladwin county has loaned $700 in surplus money to a farmer at seven per cent interest, taking a mortgage on the farm.

The treasurer has been cited to the law, which fixes a penalty of $1,000 fine and imprisonment for such misappropriation of public funds, and has been given until December 25 to replace the fund. There are other reports of misappropriation of this fund, and an auditor may be sent to look up some of these reports.

Local option editors have formed a state association about sixty editors joining and subscribing the following declaration and articles. "Believing that local option has passed beyond the experimental stage and has proved to be a system preferable to the license plan for dealing with the liquor traffic we desire to become identified with the Local Option Press association of Michigan. It is understood, first that this shall not commit us to support any political party or any candidate for office or refrain from supporting any candidate. Second, that it shall impose no financial obligation. Third, that one of the principal purposes to be served through this orgization shall be the exchange of information relating to local option in our counties, with our newspaper work what may be thought helpful to the ends we mutually have in view."

The state board of auditors are going to have an investigation made of the books of the state board of barbers, and probably F. Z. Hamilton, state accountant, will be called upon to go over the books.

The attention of the board to the condition of the books was brought by C. F. Blake of Jackson, who states that the books are in a very confused condition due in measure to a lack of book keeping knowledge by previous secretaries. The board is self supporting, and no money is contributed to its support by the state.

Now that the subject of spraying fruit trees has become so generally interesting to the public, the problem of having the work done properly is a question which is worrying many of the small farmers and it has been suggested that a man whose inclinations leads him to such a line of work, should go through the country with an apparatus suitable and make a business of spraying the farmers' orchards for them. A reasonable price could be charged for the work and besides making a lucrative employment for himself the carrying out of such a plan would be working an untold good for the country. As conditions are now, one man can go the trouble and expense of cleaning his orchard of the various pests, only to have his neighbor neglect to care for his trees the other side of the fence, and by this neglect cause the undoing of all the spraying done in that neighborhood. To make the work of the sprayer effective it is necessary that the work be uniform over the country. The most practical way this can be done is by the plan above mentioned, have a man or men make this a business and do it right.—Mt. Pleasant Enterprise.

A goodly portion of the fine fruit displayed at Traverse City during state grange week by the Western Michigan Development Bureau has been put on exhibition in Detroit. It is the belief of the officers of the bureau that once the people of Detroit see the fine fruits grown in Western Michigan and learn of the superior quality of the same, especially in the matter of flavor, that there will be a decided increase in the demand for the products of the Western Michigan orchards.

Vinegar Season Is Near.

Bulletin No. 258 of the New York experiment station recommends the following as one of the most satisfactory methods of making vinegar: When the cider is pressed from the apples the barrels should be filled about two-thirds full and the bung replaced by a loose plug of cotton, which will lessen evaporation and keep out bugs and dirt. Where the quantity of vinegar to be made is considerable the barrels should be placed in a room where the temperature can be kept from 70 to 80 degrees during the full and early winter months. If the batch is small the barrels may be left out of doors while the weather is warm and then placed in the warmest room convenient and later placed in a dry cellar.

If the temperature of the storeroom does not fall below 45 degrees the conversion of the sugar into alcohol will require about six months, but the process of fermentation may be hastened by an addition of fresh commercial yeast. When the cider has quit working the clear portion should be drawn off, the barrel rinsed out and the liquid replaced, with the addition of from two to four quarts of good vinegar containing some mother. The next process, the change of the alcohol into acetic acid, may be effected in three months and may require two years. In any event, it will take place most rapidly in a temperature ranging from 65 to 70 degrees. When the vinegar has reached the proper strength, which should be 5 per cent of acetic acid, the barrels should be filled full and tightly corked. This will prevent other changes and will cause the vinegar to keep its strength. If one has considerable vinegar to make it would be well for him to secure the bulletin referred to.

THE QUEST OF THE RED SLIPPER.

Dickey Secured the Prize and Got His Reward.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

An hour after dinner on that first Saturday evening Dicky Ames left his comfortable chair in the smoking room and made his way to the great entrance hall, where the younger guests were gathered about a roaring drift wood fire.

He leaned against the high chimney piece and from his shadowy corner watched the light and sparkle of Kitty Austin's lovely dark face. Once her soft eyes met his wistful glance, and she threw him a smile that set his heart to beating heavily.

"Kitty says she shall not dance until her slipper has been found," laughed Edith Botter, with a mischievous glance at Dicky.

He leaned forward and glanced down at the hearth, where a little red slipper rested lightly on the fender. The other foot was hidden 'neath the soft fullness of Kitty's red skirts.

"Where did you lose it?" asked Dicky eagerly.

Kitty blushed, and a distressed look came into her beautiful eyes. Dicky remembered that he had met a similar glance across the dinner table earlier in the evening.

"Miss Austin won't tell," drawled Chambers dizzily, "but it is a fact that she has not stirred from her chimney corner since dinner."

A laugh went around the circle, but Dicky sensed in the air of quiet possession which Mark Chambers had assumed toward Kitty. He drew a long breath and turned away.

"I will find the slipper," he said, coloring boyishly.

"And Kitty shall give you the first dance," lamented Edith.

Dicky paused. "I will be honored," he said stiffly. "But the service is its own reward."

The men stirred uneasily, and Chambers half rose from his seat,

DICKY AMES SAT UPON THE PROSTRATE BODY OF A MAN.

only to sink down beside Kitty on the settle.

"I prefer this seat to deeds of venture," he said carelessly, with a smile at Kitty.

But Miss Austin was looking around at the circle of blase faces. She lifted her eyes and flashed a strange glance into the only face which reflected her own fresh, unspoiled youth.

And Dicky, with that look engraved upon his clean heart, made his way toward the dining room with a dizzy look in his blue eyes and an amazing wonder knitting his forehead.

It could not be possible that lovely little Kitty Austin, whom he had loved so hopelessly, would look at a struggling young lawyer, one so palpably young and diffident and so obviously struggling, but—

He pushed the dining room door softly open and found himself in total darkness. It was characteristic of Dicky's romantic and chivalrous nature that he would not profane this quest with the spattering flare of a prosaic match or the white light of the electroliers.

He took a few steps forward and touched the polished edge of the table. Then he dropped to his knees on the soft rug and crawled under the big piece of furniture.

His fingers groped over the floor and suddenly closed upon a bit of soft kid, which as suddenly wriggled out of his grasp. The next instant a jath of long arms were twined about him, and he was writhing in silent combat with an unseen foe.

Over and over they rolled, the strange man panting heavily and muttering angry imprecations under his breath as Dicky strove with him for the possession of the red slipper.

It was snatched from Dicky's grasp, and the high heel came in sharp contact with his temple, and he felt the blood trickling down into his eyes. There was a jeweled buckle that tore his fingers as he fought for the prize.

The man laughed exultingly at Dicky's involuntary exclamation of pain, and then they clutched at each other savagely, and Dicky Ames got the upper hold.

A heavy chair toppled over with a crash on the parquet floor, and almost instantly a door opened, and Saunders, the butler, snapped on the lights.

His shout of surprise brought a chorus of shrieking maid servants, while through the opposite door the guests streamed into the room.

In the midst of wild disorder Dicky Ames sat upon the prostrate body of a man, a—being with sullen eyes and heavy jowl, who glared at them savagely. Near him on the rug lay a gleaming revolver and a black mask and a burglar's jimmy.

Dicky Ames, with blood stained face and one eye rapidly discoloring, with torn clothing, the white expanse of shirt front stained an ominous crimson, minus collar and tie, Dicky Ames gory, slightly bewildered, but smiling, was holding the twitching hands of his captive in a strong grip, while in his other hand dangled a hitherto red slipper!

"Has wicked n-lookin' specimen has ill care to know, sir," wheezed Saunders as he carefully disposed his bulk upon the unfortunate burglar. "If one of you gentlemen will kindly telephone to the police I'll relieve Mr. Hames."

Dicky got stiffly upon his feet and looked dazedly about him. Chambers was eying him with jealous distrust.

"Where did you find him, Ames?" he sneered.

"Under the table," returned Dicky shortly.

"In the dark?"

Dicky nodded and peered about for a sight of Kitty.

"She is sitting by the fire alone," whispered Edith Botter, with a friendly little push.

Silently they opened ranks to let the victor through, and more than one man stared curiously after him.

Some one had sped the news to Kitty, and she was sitting on the settle with bright, tearful eyes and very pink cheeks when Dicky came wearily down the long hall, the red slipper swinging from one bleeding hand. He dropped on his knees before her.

Kitty thrust out a timid silk stockinged foot, and Dicky tenderly fitted the little torn slipper to its place. She touched his broad shoulder with her fan.

"Rise, Sir Knight of the Slipper," she said, with a tremulous little laugh.

Dicky sat beside her on the high backed settle, in her tender, compassionate eyes a bleeding and scarred veteran. Soft strains of a waltz came from the drawing room.

"Kitty," said the struggling young lawyer, with strange diffidence, "I suppose you couldn't—er—you couldn't care enough about me—to"— His voice failed, and he looked down at the soft mist of dark hair beside him.

And, lo, the dark hair touched his shoulder for a fleeting instant as Kitty whispered softly:

"Indeed, indeed, I could!"

True Stories About Large Feet.

The conversation turned on big feet, remarks a writer in Pit-Bits, when one of the company said he believed his pal, Smith, would take some beating in that line.

"I was out walking with Smith one day when he slipped down with the soles of his boots pointing to a grocer's window. The grocer rushed out to inquire who was putting the shutters up."

"That's pretty fair," said a soldier who was present, "but a fellow in our company beat it hollow. After a sharp fight with the enemy we were obliged to retreat, when on looking back we saw one of our men standing upright on the field. The fact was the poor fellow had got such feet that he never fell down when he was shot."

"Well," said a horse dealer who sat in the corner, "that's rather tall. But let me have a try. A fellow came down to our stables the other day in a hurry to hire a horse for a journey he was going on. 'I'll have that one,' said he, pointing to a horse in the yard. 'Why, there isn't a man in the world can ride that animal,' I said. 'He'll work in a cart or plow, but no one can stay on his back.' 'I'll try him anyway,' said the stranger as he sprang into the saddle. I expected to see him pitched off, but the horse looked around, saw the man's feet and trotted quietly off. He thought he was between a pair of shafts."

An Exciting Situation.

It was the ninth inning, and the visiting team was at bat. The score was a tie, and every spectator in grand stand or bleacher was on edge. To make it more exciting the bases were full, with two men out, and the team's best swatter was up, with three balls and no strikes to his credit.

In this trying moment the pitcher flung one straight at the plate.

"Str-r-r-ike one!"

A yell broke from thousands of throats.

Again the ball darted toward the plate.

"Str-r-r-ike two!"

Another unearthly yell wafted up from the assemblage. Then a death-like stillness fell over all as the pitcher carefully adjusted himself for the next and last effort.

In the midst of this pervading hush a young lady just back of the catcher loudly appealed to her escort:

"Will, I do hope the Giants win."

"They'll stand a good show if they put this man out."

"Everybody here seems to want to have him put out, don't they, Will?"

"They certainly do."

"Then why doesn't one of those idle policemen put the horrid thing out?"—Judge.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

"How much better it would be for you if this were the last goodby and I should not come back!"

"For me?"

"Yes. You could marry the prince without having me on your conscience forevermore."

"Mr. Chase!"

"It's easier to forget the dead than the living, they say."

"Don't be too sure of that."

"Ah, there's Selim! Goodby! We'll have good news for you all, I hope, before long. Keep your eyes on Neenah. She and Selim have arranged a set of signals. Don't lie awake all night, and don't pray for me," he scoffed, in reckless mood.

The three men stole out through the small gate in the upper end of the park. Selim at once took the lead. They crept off into the black forest, keeping clear of the mountain path until they were far from the walls.

The starlight filtered down through the leafy canopy above the road, increasing rather than decreasing the density of the shadows through which they sped. None but strong determined, inspired men could have followed the pace set by the lithe, sure footed Selim.

Mile after mile fell behind them with no relaxation of energy or purpose. They were coming to the ridge road, and Selim fell back to explain the need for caution. This was the road, in all likelihood, he explained that the abductors would have used in their flight from the cavern. Two miles farther south it joined the wide highway that ran from Ararat to the mines.

Selim crept on ahead to reconnoiter. He was back in ten minutes with the information that a party of men had but lately passed along the road toward the south. Their footprints in the soft, untraveled road were fresh. The stub of a cigarette had scarcely burned itself out.

They broke away from the road and took a less exposed course through the forest to their right, keeping well within earshot of the ridge, but moving so carefully that there was slight danger of alarming the party ahead.

At last the sound of voices came to the ears of the pursuers. As they crept closer and closer they became aware of the fact that the party had halted in the roadway at the point where a sharp defile through the rocks opened a way down into the valley. Like snakes the pursuers wriggled their way to a point just above the small basin in which the party was congregated.

A great throb of exultation leaped up from their hearts. In plain view, at the side of the road, were the two persons for whom they were searching.

"Good luck is with us," whispered Chase uncomprehensively.

Lady Agnes, dishevelled, her dress half stripped from her person, was seated upon a great bowlder, staring hopelessly, lifelessly, at the crowd of men in the roadway. Beside her stood a tall islander, watching her and at the same time listening keenly to the dispute that went on between his fellows. She was not bound. Her hands and feet and lips were free.

Bobby Browne was standing near by. His hands were tightly bound behind his back. His face was blood covered, and the upper part of his body was almost bare, evidence of the struggle he had made against overwhelming odds. He was staring at the ground, his head and shoulders drooping in utter dejection.

Three of the treasure chests were standing beside the road, empty seats for as many weary carriers. It was all quite plain to Chase. Drew and his men had chanced upon the two white people darting out of their ridge to the cave for the purpose of removing the chests.

Rasula was harangueing the crowd of men in the road.

"It is the only way," he was storming angrily. "We cannot put them to death until we are sure that the others have no chance to escape to Persland. I am a lawyer. I know what it would mean if the story got to the ears of the government. We have them safely in our hands. The others will soon die. Then—then there can be no mistake! They must be taken to the mines and kept there until I have explained everything to the people. Part of us shall conduct them to the lower mill and the rest of us go on to the bank with these chests of gold."

Rasula and six of the sturdiest men prepared to continue the journey to Ararat, transporting the chests. Five sullen, resentful fellows moved over beside the captives and threw themselves down upon the grassy sward.

"We will wait here till day comes," growled one of them defiantly. "Why should we risk our necks going down the pass tonight? It is 1 o'clock. The sun will be here in three hours. Go on!"

"As you like, Abou Dai," said Rasula, shrugging his pinched shoulders. "I shall come to the mill at 6 o'clock." Turning to the prisoners, he bowed low and said, with a soft laugh: "Adieu, my lady, and you, most noble sir. May your dreams be pleasant ones. Dream that you are wedded and have come into the wealth of Japat, but spare none of your dreams to the husband and wife who are lying awake and weeping for the foolish ones who would go searching for the forbidden fruit. Folly is a hard road to travel, and it leads to the graveyard of fools. Adios!"

Lady Agnes bent over and dropped her face into her hands. She was trembling convulsively. Browne did not show the slightest sign that he had heard the galling words.

At a single sharp command the six men picked up the three chests and moved off rapidly down the road, Rasula striding ahead with the flaring torch.

They were barely out of sight when Deppingham moved as though impulse was driving him into immediate attack upon the guards who were left behind with the unhappy prisoners. Chase laid a restraining hand upon his arm.

"Wait! Plenty of time. Wait an hour. Don't spoil everything. We'll save them sure," he breathed in the other's ear.

The minutes slipped by with excruciating slowness. The wakeful eyes of the three watchers missed nothing that took place in the little grass grown niche below them. They could have sprung almost into the center of the group from the position they occupied. Two of the men sat with their backs to the rocks, their rifles across their knees. The others sprawled lazily upon the soft grass. Two torches stuck in the earth threw a weird light over the scene.

Bobby Browne was now below with his shoulder against a fallen tree trunk, staring with answering eyes at the woman across the way. She was looking off into the night, steadfastly refusing to glance in his direction.

Then suddenly Lady Agnes arose to her feet and lifted her hands high toward the black dome of heaven. Solemnly-like, and prayed aloud to her God, the sneering islanders looking on in silent derision.

MICE PRODUCE PLAGUES.

How to Stop Their Ravages of Crops and Orchards.

The annual damage caused by field mice to crops, nurseries and orchards in the United States has been estimated by the agricultural department at over $33,000,000. There are fifty species of mice.

With few exceptions the short tailed field mice are readily distinguishable from other mice by their stout, chunky bodies, short legs, short, rotund tails, blunt muzzles, short ears and rather small eyes. The species shown in the cut are dark brownish or grayish brown in color and considerably larger and heavier than the common house mouse.

They live almost everywhere in damp meadows, where their presence may be detected among the grass and weeds by small, well defined, crooked trails, along which at intervals are little heaps of fresh grass or other herbage. In alfalfa or clover fields their numerous burrows are usually in colonies. As a rule, they appear first along ditches or about damp areas, where dead plants are almost certain evidence of their work.

In the past many methods of destroying field mice have been tried, yet the records describe no instance in which well established plagues have been successfully suppressed. Failing to recognize the early stage of the plague, the people in stricken districts did not usually adopt vigorous measures until after the fields were swarming with mice. The failure, then, has been due partly to lack of co-operation and partly to lack of knowledge of quick, cheap and effective measures. Without witnessing such a plague one can hardly form a conception of the almost incredible numbers of mice and of the magnitude of the task of destroying them.

CURSE OF TOP MEADOW

Among methods of little value which have been tried in other countries to rid the land of these scourges are rolling the land with heavy cylinders, trampling it by cavalry or by droves of sheep, liberating large numbers of cats and injecting water, steam or suffocating gases into the mouse burrows. Many measures practicable on a small scale or of value in the early stages are entirely inadequate for the suppression of well established plagues, particularly where farms are as large as in the United States. Among such methods are digging trenches or pitfalls wider at the bottom than at the top, into which the mice fall; killing by means of traps, cats or dogs, burning off the herbage in infested areas and flooding the fields. The elimination of these leaves as methods generally applicable for suppressing plagues only two, the employment of disease and poisoning.

DIRT ROAD PROBLEM

Good Results Can be Obtained Through Drainage System.

STAGNANT WATER AN ENEMY.

It Is One of the Chief Evils of Highways of Earth—Good Road Work of an Illinois Institution—Bad Drainage Expensive.

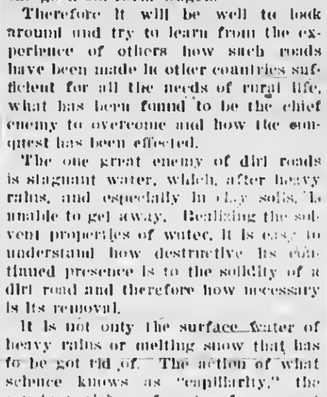
In the movement for good roads to have practical results it is well to recognize the fact that over large sections of the country rock or gravel roads are, for local and economic reasons, unattainable and even unnecessary. Dirt roads will prevail in the more strictly rural districts for many years to come, possibly until aeroplanes and dirigible balloons take the place of the good old farm wagon.

Therefore it will be well to look around and try to learn from the experience of others how such roads have been made in other countries sufficient for all the needs of rural life, what has been found to be the chief enemy to overcome and how the conquest has been effected.

The one great enemy of dirt roads is stagnant water, which, after heavy rains, and especially in clay soils, is unable to get away. Realizing the solvent properties of water, it is easy to understand how destructive its continued presence is to the solidity of a dirt road and therefore how necessary is its removal.

It is not only the surface water of heavy rains or melting snow that has to be got rid of. The action of what science knows as "capillarity," the constant rising of water from great depths toward the surface, has also to be contended with. That this natural process is always going on is well understood, though its causes and methods of action still form matter for debate. To catch and control this water coming thus and to establish what is known as a water plane some three or four feet below the surface of the ground, where it can do the most good to vegetation, and, as a sort of side issue, the least harm to the roads, has been sought for and found in the modern scientific system of land drainage.

Some time ago the use of brush filled drains was very effective in a section of Illinois where the soil is much of the nature of the Kansas gumbo. An institution which owned a farm of 320 acres, along one side of which ran a road much used for general traffic and which that institution had agreed to keep in order in lieu of paying the road rates, found that a considerable amount of the time of the light teams was taken up in hauling wagons and teasing ill humored travelers out of the slough which constituted about a quarter of a mile of this road where it ran through a ravine with timbered or cornfield hedges on each side, which had not been trimmed for twenty years. It had been the custom to underdrain sloughs of gravel and refuse from a coal mine every now and then for the road, incontinently swallowed them up and asked for more. Old country experience suggested drains, and as not time or the years to be obtained the old hedges were cut down to a height of three feet, and ditches eighteen inches wide and from three to four feet deep were dug on each side the road and filled with the brush, well stamped in and topped up with a good depth of soil. The road bed was deeply rounded up, and in a very short time the ancient morass gained the reputation of being one of the best bits of roads in the neighborhood.



ROLLER WITH "SPIKES" TO COMPACT EARTH ROAD.

[From Good Roads Magazine, New York.]

The tiles and pipes used for this drainage work are made of a porous clay, unglazed, the water entering them not alone and only, but percolating through their whole length. This can be easily proved by sealing up both ends of one of them and burying it three or four feet in any damp place. In a week or two when dug up it will be found full of water. Of course when a proper and fairly even fall about two inches to a hundred feet is given to a drain made of these pipes it will carry the water to any distance desired. The bottom of a drain must be kept level and the pipes laid so carefully together that no earth can get in between any two of them.

Since the general desire seems to be for good roads without prejudice as to what means or materials are used to produce them it would be well for some of our farmer readers to try the effect of a few of these drainpipes where they can be produced, brush where no pipes are to be had, on their own private roads where water is too abundant.

EDUCATION FOR THE BOYS.

Why Sons of Small Farmers Develop Managerial Ability.

The education acquired on the small farm broadens citizenship because it is a many sided education and gives correct impressions of many phases of life. All over the world the small, independent farmers are staunch supporters of conservative government. They are intense lovers of home and opposed to radical changes.

Ultimately the small farmer learns to keep a reserve of cash against emergencies, and these aggregated accumulations become very important factors in the capital of the nation, for they are more reliable than deposits from commercial sources. The vast sums of money necessary to carry on the business of a nation are not derived from the deposits of capitalists, but from the aggregation of millions of thrifty small depositors. This is especially true in England, France, Germany and the United States.

It has been observed for years that the sons of small farmers develop managing ability. From their earliest years they are compelled to do things and to act independently. It is from this source that the greatest number of managers of the various enterprises of our country have been drawn.

The great value of educating and training youth for agriculture is so universally conceded that it does not require discussion. The necessity of presenting and impressing better types of husbandry upon adult farmers through demonstrations under their care is rapidly being accepted by the American people as a most important means of education for the rural masses and necessary to any general and rapid advancement.

If all is considered education that "lends out," develops or trains the individual, then the amount of education acquired in even the best schools is only a fraction of what the average man must know to succeed in life. It is, then, of the highest importance to the state that this greater mass of knowledge should be correct, broad, conservative and elevating. Liberal provision has been made for schools by the state, by churches and by individual gifts, but the molding of this greater knowledge to the best interests of society has been mainly left to the caprice of individual effort. The state can with propriety specially foster such conditions of society, such lines of industry or such occupations as evidently tend to mental and physical vigor, to breadth of understanding, to the best citizenship and to the stability of the state. For these ends no more potent influence has been found than an intelligent, prosperous and contented body of thrifty small farmers.

SHETLAND PONIES.

There Is Good Demand, and They Can Be Raised With Much Profit.

An authority thoroughly familiar with the Shetland pony and its history says: There is an ever increasing demand in this country for them. The farmer could very well turn his attention to raising them and realize much profit therefrom.

Egypt was the original country for horses, but as they are now found in all parts of the world they differ greatly, each kind of horse being adapted to the climate and productions of the country he inhabits. The Shetland pony is just the animal required in Scotland, the Shetland islands (from which its name is derived) and Canada. Its diminutive size suits the scanty vegetation of these countries, which would not support large animals, but if they were as feeble as they are small they would be of little service. They, however, possess immense strength in proportion to their size and are so tough and healthy that they can live among the mountains through long winters and survive to a great age, even fifty or sixty years.

The pony of the Shetland Isles is, in fact, the offspring of circumstances. He is the pet of the family, gentle as an Arab's steed under similar training. He will follow his friends indoors like a dog and lick the platters or the children's faces. He has no more kick in him than a cat and no more bite than a puppy.

He is a noble example of the complete suppression of those vicious propensities that some equines exhibit when they are ill treated and of the intelligence and good temper that may be developed in horses by kindness. And so the "Sheltie" is an animal which for many generations has been reared and trained under special and peculiar circumstances, and hence his distinctive and general character, his extraordinary instincts and intelligence, his small size and his purity and fixity of type.

It has been demonstrated that the Shetland is just as well adapted for America as elsewhere, and there are [illegible] reasons that the little fellow should be extensively bred in our fair land.

SKIPPER BEN'S GIRL.

The Treasure That Came to the Lonely Fisherman.

By FRANK H. SWEET.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

If in your travels you ever visit the rugged coast of New England you may come upon the Cove, with its cluster of brown, gray and black wooden houses, having queer, uneven roofs and crooked chimneys, and its narrow strip of pebbly beach, backed by high, forbidding rocks.

You are very likely to find boats drawn up upon the beach, some of them overturned for calking, and great heaps of kelp and seaweed and layers of salt hay, showing how far up the water comes at high tide.

And climbing over the boats or playing along the beach I am quite sure you will find a little girl—a brown faced, barefooted little girl in a faded plaid frock, whose hair is like seaweed, a rich chestnut underneath, but faded to a sort of dusty tinge where the sun strikes it.

If you ask this little girl who she is she will peep shyly up at you through her tangled hair, with a pair of eyes that will win your love and admiration at once, and will answer, "Dolly!"

LYING ON THE BEACH WAS A LITTLE GIRL

Then she will run away and hide among the boats, with her brown curls shaken over her blushing cheeks.

But if you ask any one else, say the old lobster man combe examining his lobster pots beside his warped and leaky old dory, or, better still, old Captain Graves as he stands on the wharfs every day or sits by the store in Usha Tucker's store telling of the fishing when he was young, he will say:

"That? Oh, that's Skipper Ben's gal!"

It is a strange story, and it all happened some years ago—a great many years ago, Dolly would say—when Skipper Ben was not a skipper at all, but merely a brown skinned young fisherman.

He lived with his old mother in the little brown house that stands quite by itself by the watershed and whose eaves almost touch the ground. And over in the blackish looking cottage, with the shingles down the sides, lived his sweetheart, a rosy lass named Dolly.

They had always been friends ever since they were old enough to go about and sailed boats together in the pools among the rocks or fished from the wharfs. As they grew older the core "just kind of understood" that they were to be married as soon as Ben should become owner or part owner of a fishing vessel.

Ben was an industrious fellow and was always off on the banks. Each time he came home he laid a little money away in an old stocking, for he was saving up to buy his boat, and once while he was on a fishing cruise with Captain Pratt the captain told him of a prime little schooner he had at home in the cove, which Ben might secure for the contents of his stocking and in payment for his services that season.

Ben came home a happy youth. He had already christened his new possession the Dolly. And as he walked up the narrow, crooked street of the little fishing town he wondered why all of his old comrades should look at him with such solemn, pitying glances.

Poor Ben! He soon learned why they all looked pityingly at him. His sweetheart, Dolly, was dead. Two weeks before she had been buried in the little graveyard on the hill.

Poor Ben, indeed!

He was never the same man afterward. He kept the Dolly and took a pride in her, going off to the banks and becoming in time one of the first fishermen in the Cove. But he never was a boy again. All his old light heartedness had vanished, and he became grave, moody and silent. For some years he lived, when he was at home, alone in the little brown house—for his old mother was dead, too. A lonely time he had of it when he was not at the banks. In the evenings he would sit for hours with his pipe, staring into the fire and thinking how different it all might have been if only Dolly had lived.

One night there was a terrible storm, and Skipper Ben sat by his lonely hearth smoking and thinking. The wind blew and howled about the little brown house. It rushed down the chimney and beat against the side of the house until it rocked. But Ben does not notice a bit of wind.

Presently his gloomy thoughts got the better of him. The tiny room seemed to grow as narrow and as suffocating as a grave, and he rushed out into the night and the storm, where he could draw in deep breaths of the wild salt air.

There was no rain, but the clouds were scurrying swiftly across the sky. And well they might with such a wind at their heels.

Such a wind! If Ben had not been the broad, sturdy fellow that he was it would have blown him off his feet. But as it was he strode up and down the beach with long, fierce strides and heeded neither the wind nor the roaring surf.

Was it strange that, with the fierce storm raging without and the equally fierce storm raging within, Skipper Ben should not have heard the shrieks and cries of distress that night? Not so very strange, I think, but what was strange was that above all the din and commotion he should have heard a feeble wail—the faintest little wail in the world.

But he heard it at any rate and hurried to the spot whence it came.

There, lying on the beach, with its frock securely fastened to a broken spar, was a little child.

"Why, you poor little creeter!" exclaimed Ben as he unfastened the dress. "How'n the world did you git out here?"

The baby stopped crying as soon as she saw him and, stretching out her tiny arms, gave a little chuckle of delight.

He picked her up tenderly and, wringing out the soaked little garments, which were like cobwebs and were trimmed with the finest lace, buttoned her up inside his heavy jacket.

Then it was that he heard the shouts and cries for the first time and saw men running helplessly up and down the beach and gazing seaward.

What were they looking at? Looking at nothing. They were staring and gaping at the place where a good ship had just gone to pieces. Could no one be saved? No; it was impossible. No boat could live in such a surf, and there is, moreover, no lifeboat at the Cove.

The ship went to pieces where she struck. Of all the crew not one lived to tell the tale, and of all the passengers not one was saved except the little baby buttoned up under Skipper Ben's rough pilot jacket.

But the baby lived and was like a sunbeam in the little brown house, for no one talked of putting her in the asylum. Nor is there any orphan asylum at the Cove, though there are orphans in plenty, for many a good fellow goes to the banks never to return not supposing that he has said goodby for the last time to the youngsters at home.

The baby cried for "mamma" a little at first, but she soon learned to say "Ben" instead. And from that day on the little room never became narrow and stuffy, and Ben's pipe was the pipe of peace and comfort.

The next year, when he went to the banks, he left her in the care of Usha Tucker's wife at the store, but the year after she cried so hard when he was going that he took her with him. And ever since she has been his constant companion, and he named her Dolly.

Five years have passed since that stormy night, and Dolly is six years old. She is a bright, happy little girl, and she loves the grim old ocean dearly, even if it did so nearly become her tomb.

Sometimes in the evening when the wind is blowing and shaking the little brown house and the fire is roaring brightly and merrily up the chimney Skipper Ben will tell Dolly how he found her lying on the beach securely fastened to a broken spar.

Then he will pull out a little old, worn leather trunk and will take from it the once dainty baby clothes. They are yellow now and still stained with sea water. He will hold the delicate fabric in his hard, rough hand with reverential awe and look with wonder at the little faded blue ribbons that once were shoulder knots.

"I wonder who your parents was?" he says to Dolly. "Only think what you might ha' been! Why, you might ha' been a markis!"

Skipper Ben's round blue eyes become rounder and bluer at the thought, and he takes his pipe from his mouth.

"You might ha' been a dorebpss!"

But Dolly shakes her head with her brown curls and lays her cheek against Ben's rough coat, saying: "No, no! I'd rather be Skipper Ben's girl!"

Mexican Etiquette.

There are some points of Mexican etiquette that to many foreigners accustomed to more brusque and businesslike ways seem often affected and unnecessary—such, for instance, as the oftimes protracted discussions as to which of two gentlemen shall enter a street car or doorway first or which shall be allowed to walk on the outside of the sidewalk. As a rule, however, most foreigners who live for any length of time in a Latin country finally come to enjoy the more cordial forms of greeting.—Mexican Herald.

HEISE---AGER

Pretty Wedding at Barnard New Year's Night.

A very pretty wedding took place New Year's night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. George Ager of Barnard, when their daughter, Laura, was married to Edward Heise of this place. The ceremony was performed by Rev. F. M. Taylor of Charlevoix under a canopy of evergreen and white roses. The bride wore a gown of blue silk and carried a bouquet of white carnations.

Miss Carrie Hartlett was bridesmaid and William Heise was best man. About forty guests and relatives witnessed the ceremony, after which a bountiful repast was served.

The wedding presents were numerous and beautiful. Mr. and Mrs. Heise are both highly esteemed and have the best wishes of a large circle of friends. They will reside in this city.

TWO KILLED

Bad Accident on Pere Marquette Railway Near Traverse City.

One of the most disastrous train wrecks which has occurred in this part of the state for a long time happened last Wednesday afternoon about three o'clock between Brawn and Traverse City on the Pere Marquette railroad. A logging train broke in two going up a long grade and the rear end of the train collided with a snow plow which was following. Two men were killed, being George W. Phelps, forty years old, conductor of the snow plow, and Edward Kennicott, thirty years old, section foreman. W. W. Drew, trainmaster, was severely injured, sustaining a fractured arm and leg, beside scalp wounds and bruises. The night passenger train was four and a half hours late owing to the fact that the track was not cleared and the train was obliged to make a detour over the M. & N. E. tracks into Traverse City.

DIED AT WASHINGTON

Rev. A. T. Waterman a Former Charlevoix Pastor

Had Been Living in Retirement for the Past Ten Years.

The Rev. A. T. Waterman, pastor of the Congregational church at Charlevoix about fifteen years ago, died December 29, in Washington, D. C. He had resided in retirement in Washington for ten years, after nearly a quarter of a century in active service in Congregational parishes of Michigan. His last years were spent quietly in Washington, with Mrs. Waterman and his sons, Jason and Storrs. After a long and painful illness he lapsed into unconsciousness and quietly breathed his last.

Mr. Waterman was the third of a direct line of preachers, beginning with Elijah Waterman, a famous divine of the days immediately following the revolution. Thomas E. Waterman, son of Elijah, was a clergyman and the father of Alfred F. All three were graduates of Yale, Alfred T. completing his course in 1853 and graduated in theology from Princeton in 1860. Five years later he was married to Emily Stocking, the daughter of the Rev. William Redfield Stocking, who was a missionary to Persia. After a decade of service in New England, Mr. Waterman went to Michigan in 1876, his first pastorate being at Marshall. His other pastorates were at Grand Blanc, East Tawas, Ovid, Bancroft, Nashville, Charlevoix and Baldwin. Mr. Waterman's record as a minister was notable for his hostility to sham and for his frankness in preaching directly toward the situation which confronted him in his parishes.

Mrs. Waterman and four children survive; Charlotte Hutchins and Caroline Darrow of Detroit; Jason and Storrs Seymour of Washington. William Stocking and Fanny Fitch passed on before.

The funeral services, held December 30, were in charge of the Odd Fellows and of Dr. Samuel N. Woodruw, pastor of the First Congregational church. Mr. Waterman retained his membership in the Odd Fellows lodge at Baldwin. In accordance with his wish the body was cremated, and the ashes were scattered. He was seventy-seven years of age.

UPPER PENINSULA

Warm Fight on in Several Counties on Local Option.

Spirited contests between the "wets" and the "drys" are in progress in a number of upper peninsula counties. The chief business transacted in the recent meeting of the Gogebic county board was in regard to a petition asking a local option election. This petition contained 1,108 signatures or a few more than the required one-third of the electorate. Petitions also were presented signed by sixty of those who had previously signed the "dry" document asking that their names be withdrawn. Without these sixty signatures the petition of the drys would be deficient.

The reasons given by those who wished their names withdrawn were various, some stating that the nature of the petition had been misrepresented to them, some that they had not thoroughly understood what they were signing and others simply that they had changed their minds.

The chief point at issue seems to be as to whether these names can be legally withdrawn or not. After the supervisors had listened to Rev. C. H. Rutledge of Ishpeming, for the "drys" and Attorney George Driscoll for the "wets" the matter was referred to a committee which will report January 5.

In Mackinaw county, papers in mandamus proceedings brought against the board of supervisors have been served on County Clerk Rankin. The rule requires the respondents to appear in court the second day of the January term and show cause why they should not be ordered to reconvene and to count all the names on the local option petitions and to submit the question to vote. The board had ruled the petitions deficient.

The first blood in the legal fight in connection with the local option campaign in Schoolcraft county has gone to the "drys." Circuit Judge Steere having issued an order for the board of supervisors to show cause why a mandamus shall not issue compelling it to submit the local option proposition to a vote of the people next April. The petitions had been knocked out in this county also.

The proposition of submitting the saloon question in Marquette county is hanging fire, pending a supreme court decision. In Dickson, Chippewa and Luce counties the proposition already has been ordered submitted to the electors next spring.

Alcohol and Tobacco and Their Effects on the Body and Mind.

Alcohol is a thin transparent liquid closely resembling water in appearance, but it is very different in its effects on the body and should be differently used. It is made of the ferment of different fruits and grains which are made to ferment by adding sugar to their juices and leaving them exposed to the air for a long time.

Its effects on the body are very marked. It stunts the growth of the brain, makes it lose its power over the body and spoils the reason. It effects the senses as it spoils the sight, weakens the hearing, weakens the sense of smell and spoils the sense of taste. It makes the voice harsh and weakens the lungs, causing pneumonia. It makes the heart beat faster and so weakens it, causing heart failure. It makes the heart fatty and hard as it also does the liver. It stops the secretion of bile by the liver. Alcohol effects the nerves, muscles and fibers, making them weak and paralyzing them. It even effects the stomach by making the gastric glands throw out more juice, thus causing an increased flow of blood through it. It overworks the stomach and redens the mucous membrane.

Alcohol causes fatigue, crime, poverty, insanity and wrong use of money. It causes people to die young, effects the morals and stops recovery from sickness.

No drinker is free from the effects of alcohol as it effects all who use it. Arctic explorers will not use it. Cook could not have reached the north pole if he had been a drunkard. Athletes will not use it as it makes the muscles and joints stiff.

Business men will not have men in their employment who use it, because they know that men who use alcohol are not so bright nor so honest as men who do not. Drunkards cannot fill positions offered by the government, because Uncle Sam wants men who know their business.

Had alcohol been good for the people of Charlevoix county, the county would not have gone dry.

Tobacco is a product of the warmer countries of the world. It is grown extensively and is used, after being cured, for chewing and smoking.

It lessens the appetite and injures digestion. It creates an appetite for alcoholic drinks.

Its effects upon the body are almost the same as those of alcohol, and these effects have already been stated.

In conclusion, I would say that every man and woman would be better off if they left alcohol and tobacco entirely alone.

SELECTING THE BRONZE TURKEY.

A Thanksgiving Story.

By PORTE JEFFERSON.

[Copyright, 1909, by American Press Association.]

Amanda Butler cautiously opened the door of the turkey shed and flashed the rays of her lantern until they fell broadcast on the clumsy form of a large turkey in the corner. He roused as she approached and stretched himself for action.

It was the work of an instant for Amanda's nimble fingers to flash up to his legs, and when she darted back there dangled from one foot a strip of bright red flannel. When Amanda locked the door and turned away the victim of her craftiness was protesting loudly against the absurdity of wearing red flannel in August.

Jeremiah sat on the doorstep in his shirt sleeves, smoking a peaceful pipe.

"There," panted Amanda as she put out the lantern and sat down beside him and fanned herself with her sunbonnet; "I've got one job done."

"What's that?" queried Jeremiah lazily.

"Marked the Thanksgiving turkey."

"Which one?"

"The big bronze one. I've had him in mind for some time. He always roosts in the shed, so I caught him asleep just now and tied a red rag on his leg. I'll shut him up come the 1st of November."

"The big bronze turkey always roosts in the walnut tree. That's why I selected him for Thanksgiving dinner," remarked Mr. Butler deliberately. "Him a-roosting out of doors shows he has wild tastes, and what tastes better than wild turkey, I wonder know?"

Amanda received this unconscious witticism on her husband's part in stony silence.

"Of course I mean the biggest of them two bronze fellers," added Jeremiah after awhile.

"I marked the biggest," said Amanda acidly.

Jeremiah whistled one stanza of "The Star Spangled Banner," knocked his pipe against the step and went into the house. A moment later Amanda heard him winding the kitchen clock preparatory to retiring for the night.

"PETE JONES IS COMING AROUND TO KILL DO. TURKEY"

"A woman that's married might as well give up trying to have her way about anything," murmured Amanda despondently, "just as if I didn't know that bronze turkey in the shed was the biggest of the two! If I don't eat that turkey I'll not eat any, so there! I'll show Jeremiah Butler I've got some gumption if I am a poor, tolerable married woman!"

Having delivered herself of these sentiments, Amanda felt more cheerfully disposed and in her turn retired to bed, where her husband was already breathing loudly and harmoniously.

The next morning when she went out to feed the poultry two big bronze gobblers were stalking about the yard, each with a rag about one leg. The red flannelest turkey ruffled indignantly every time his beady eye caught sight of the objectionable color on his foot. The other one gazed moornfully at a piece of black tape that adorned his extremity.

Jeremiah crossed the yard with foaming pails of milk.

"What's that there black rag?" demanded Amanda angrily.

Her husband looked quizzically at her and then went on. "That there turkey is in mourning because he's going to be killed for Thanksgiving dinner," he said dryly.

Amanda said no more, but her plump face grew very pink, and her smooth forehead was creased in an anxious frown.

That morning the rival turkeys fought bitterly. Whether it was the red flannel which aroused the mourning turkey's gorge I cannot say. It is sufficient to note that they fought fairly and that the red flannel gentleman put the other in open flight. When it was all over Amanda went out and smilingly picked up several handfuls of bronze feathers.

Jeremiah, who had witnessed the battle through a crack in the barn door, grinned openly and went back to his neglected garden.

At night a remarkable thing happened. The victorious wearer of red fought a roost in the walnut tree, while the mourning turkey ignominiously found refuge in the shed, and, strange to relate, he chose the very spot vacated by his rival.

All that summer and early fall Amanda and Jeremiah avoided the subject of turkeys. After awhile others noticed that the topic was a disagreeable one, and so it was tacitly avoided by every one.

The first of November two bronze gobblers nervously paced two narrow pens. The red flannel turkey was generously fed by Amanda, while the black tape bird was as conscientiously stuffed by her husband.

Amanda grew nervous and irritable as the weeks wore on toward Thanksgiving. She did not really care which turkey she ate for it had been a prosperous year with them, and she was thankful in every sense for the fullness of their cellar and granary. What she really did mind was the giving in to Jeremiah. She had always been the one to give in, and this time—it did seem for once as if he might let her have her way. It was true she had her way about everything concerning the household, but—

She baked and boiled and stewed for a fragrant week before the great feast day. There would be cousins from neighboring towns to dine with them, and the turkey must be slain and prepared the day before. Such a huge bird would be plenty for the ten who would be present. Amanda wished she might invite more, so that there would be some excuse for killing both birds, and thus cut the gordian knot of contention without loss of dignity to either Jeremiah or herself.

On the evening of the second day before Thanksgiving, Jeremiah Butler and Amanda sat in the warm circle of light cast by the reading lamp. Jeremiah was reading the county paper and his wife was sewing.

Suddenly Jeremiah looked up. "Pete Jones is coming around to kill the turkey tomorrow morning," he said, with assumed carelessness. "He'll get it all dressed and ready for you."

"I've been thinking," said Amanda slowly, "that you might as well kill that there black tape turkey of yours. He looks pretty well conditioned, and he's the biggest bird after all. I don't feel like as if I could have any contention this Thanksgiving. We've been so prospered this year."

Jeremiah coughed dubiously. "Amanda," he began rather sheepishly, "I did kind of a fool thing last summer. When you tied a rag on your turkey I went out the next morning and changed them rags. That's why your turkey went to roost with a black rag and mine went back to his tree with a red one. I meant it for a joke at first. I thought I'd have my way about killing the black one, and when we was eating it I was going to tell you it was your bird after all, but it looks silly now."

"It was silly," said Amanda energetically. "I about made myself sick over them two turkeys. I don't know if I wanter eat neither one. If I had known you was trying to joke why, I don't know as I ever knew you to make a joke, Jeremiah."

"I never did before," said Jeremiah, with a sickly smile. "I guess I won't again. I'll tell Pete to kill the black rag turkey, and then it'll be the one you selected."

"I'd rather have the wild, flavored one," admitted Amanda. "I'm partial to wild turkeys. Then it was your turkey that bit mine and made him run, after all." She glanced at the bronze feathers above the clock.

"That there wild one was a gamy bird," chuckled Jeremiah, with another break into unconscious wit.

The next day when Pete Jones came to kill the turkey he found Jeremiah and Amanda busily engaged in cleaning silver.

"Which one of them two bronze gobblers shall I kill? One's as fat as Father, and each one's got a dirty rag tide around his foot."

Jeremiah looked critically at a fork he was polishing and then he turned a quizzical smile upon his wife.

"Kill 'em both, Pete, and take one home for yourself."

"And whichever one it is, Pete enjoy it," smiled Amanda at her radiant boy in a transport.

Dilettante Alpinists

The real Alps are not civilized. Never can they be civilized. True, highways have been built so that horseand motor cars go where once only the guide led the way. The modern hotel is beside the clear blue lake under the shadow of the snow clad mountain sometimes high upon a spur it lets throw out. You can linger over your table d'hote listening to the orchestra dance all the evening, take horse, stroll on the promenades at the fashionable hour and say you have "done" the Alps. Yet you may only have seen them miles above you and have had not even a taste of the exhilaration, the joy of living, that comes only to the mountaineer. Then there is another way of saying you have been an Alpinist—a day or so walking amid the foothills on the lower slopes along the paths that have been trodden for centuries, worn smooth by peasant feet. Looking from some viewpoint upon the valley a thousand feet below, the visitor imagines that this is indeed mountaineering. But he does not know he is merely going over the pathways where the home people have gone, as their fathers and forefathers went from chalet to hamlet, to sell their cheese or eggs, or in their Sunday dress to hear the good man of the church—and forget it all to the neighborly gossip after service.—Putnam's Magazine.

The Man From Brodney's

By GEORGE BARR M'CUTCHEON

Copyright, 1908, by Dodd, Mead & Co.

THE PERSIAN ANGEL.

THE man called Abou suddenly leaped to his feet and, with the cry of an eager animal, sprang to her side. His arms closed about her slender figure with the unmistakable lust of the victor. A hoarse, barbarian cry of rage burst from Deppingham's lips. His figure shot out through the air and down the short slope with the rush of an infuriated beast. Even as the astonished Abou dropped his struggling burden to meet the attack of the unexpected deliverer he was felled to the earth by a mighty blow from the rifle which his assailant swung swift and true. His skull was crushed as if it were an eggshell.

He was felled to the earth by a mighty blow.

Lady Agnes struggled to her feet, wild eyed, half crazed by the double assault. The next instant she fell forward upon her face, dead to all that was to follow in the next few minutes.

There was no struggle. Chase and Selim were upon the stupefied islanders before they could move, covering them with their rifles. The wretches fell upon their knees and howled for mercy. While Deppingham was holding his wife's limp form in his arms, calling out to her in the agony of fear, utterly oblivious to all else that was happening about him, his two friends were swiftly disarming the groveling natives. Selim's knife severed the cords that bound Bobby Browne's hands. He was staring blankly, dizzily before him.

Ten minutes later Chase was addressing himself to the four islanders who, bound and gagged, were tied by their own sashes to trees some distance from the roadside.

"I've just thought of a little service you fellows can perform for me in return for what I've done for you. All the time you're doing it, however, there will be pistols quite close to your backs. Lady Deppingham is much too weak to take the five mile walk we've got to do in the next two hours—or less. You are to have the honor of carrying her four miles and a half, and you will have to get along the best you can with the grass in your mouths. Two of you form a basket with your hands. I'll show you how."

With Selim in the lead the little procession moved swiftly, but cautiously, through the black jungle, bent on reaching the gate if possible before the night lifted. Chase and Bobby Browne brought up the rear with the two reserve carriers in hand. Browne, weak and suffering from torture and exposure, struggled bravely along, determined not to retard their progress by a single moment of indecision.

In his heart Browne was now raging against the fate that had placed him in this humiliating, almost contemptible, position. He, and he alone, was responsible for the sufferings that Lady Agnes had endured. It was as gall and wormwood to him that other men had been ordained to save her from the misery that he had created. He could almost have welcomed death for himself and her rather than to have been saved by George Deppingham.

His wife! He could never be the same to her. He had forfeited the trust and confidence of the one loyal believer among them all. And now Lady Deppingham loathed him because his weakness had been greater than hers!

When he would have calm the four helpless islanders with his own hands Hollingsworth Chase had stayed his rage with the single, caustic adjuration:

"Keep out of this, Browne! You've been enough of a bounder without trying that sort of thing."

Tears were in Bobby Browne's eyes as mile after mile he blundered along, his heart bleeding itself dry through the wound those words had made.

It was still pitch dark when they came to the ridge above the park. Through the trees the lights in the chateau could be seen. Lady Agnes opened her eyes and cried out in tremulous joy

"You've labored well and faithfully," Chase said to the panting islanders, "and I'm going to reward you. I'm going to set you free, but not yet. Don't rejoice. First we shall tie you securely to four stout trees just off the road. Just as soon as we are inside the walls I'll find some way to let your friends know that you are here."

He and Selim promptly marched the bewildered islanders into the woods. Bobby Browne, utterly exhausted, had thrown himself to the soft earth. Lady Deppingham was standing, swaying, but resolute, her gaze upon the distant friendly windows. After a long, tense moment of indecision she held out her hands, and Deppingham sprang forward in time to catch her as she swayed toward him. She was sobbing in his arms. Bobby Browne's heavy breathing ceased in that instant, and he closed his ears against the sound that came to them.

Deppingham gently implored her to sit down with him and rest. At last she said:

"I've made you unhappy. I've been so foolish. It has not been fun, either, my husband. God knows it hasn't. You do not love me now."

He did not answer her at once, and she shivered fearfully in his arms. Then he kissed her brow gently.

"I do love you, Agnes," he said intensely. "I will answer for my own love if you can answer for yours. Are you the same Agnes that you were—my Agnes?"

"Will you believe me?"

"Yes."

"I am the same Agnes. I am your Agnes. I am! You do believe me?"

He crushed her close to his breast and then patted her shoulder as a father might have touched an erring child.

At last she spoke: "It is not wholly his fault, George. I was to blame. I led him on. You understand?"

"Poor devil!" said he dryly. "It's a way you have, dear."

The object of this gentle comparsertion was staring with gloomy eyes at the lights below. He was saying to himself, over and over again, "If I can only make Drusie understand!"

Chase and Selim came down upon this little low toned picture. The former paused an instant and smiled joyously in the darkness.

The Princess Genevra was standing before him, her hand touching her turban in salute.

"Five men are near the gate," he whispered. "They watch so closely that no one may go to rescue those who have disappeared. Friends are hidden inside the wall, ready to open the gate at a signal. They have waited with Neenah all night. And day is near, sahib."

"We must attack at once," said Chase. "Quiet now!"

Five shadowy figures soon were distinguished huddled close to the wall below the gate. The sense of sight had become keen during those trying hours in the darkness.

The Islanders were conversing in low tones, a word or two now and then reaching the ears of the others.

Suddenly a blinding, mysterious light flashed upon the muttering group. As they fell back a voice, low and firm, called out to them:

"Not a sound or you die!"

Four unwavering rifles were hearing upon the surprised Islanders, and four very material men were advancing from the ghostly darkness. An electric lantern shot a ray of light athwart the scene.

"Drop your guns—quick!" commanded Chase. "Don't make a row!"

Paralyzed with fear and amazement, the men obeyed.

While the three white men kept them covered with their rifles Selim ran to the gate, uttering the shrill cry of a night bird. There was a rush of feet inside the walls, subdued exclamations, then a glad cry:

"Quick!" called Selim. The keys rattled in the locks, the bolts were thrown down, and an instant later Lady Deppingham was flying across the space which intervened between her and the gate.

The men were beside her a moment later, possessed of the weapons of the helpless sentinels. With a crash the gates were closed, and a joyous laugh rang out from the exultant throat of Hollingsworth Chase.

"By the Lord Harry, this is worth while!" he shouted. "Call in the disarmed guards were rousing the tardy alarm. The first gray wide of day was coming into the night.

He saw Neenah ahead of him, standing still in the center of the graveled path. Beyond her was the tall figure of a man.

"You are a trump, Neenah," cried Chase, hurrying up to her, "a Persian angel!"

It was not Neenah's laugh that replied. Chase gasped in amazement and then uttered a cry of joy.

The Princess Genevra, slim and erect, was standing before him, her hand touching her turban in true military salute, soft laughter rippling from her lips.

In the exuberance of joy he clasped that little hand and crushed it against his lips.

"You!" he exclaimed.

"Sh!" she warned. "I have retained my guard of honor."

He looked beyond her and beheld the tall, soldierly figure of a Rapp-Thorberg guardsman.

"The devil!" fell involuntarily from his lips.

"Not at all! He is here to keep me from going to the devil!" she cried so merrily that he laughed aloud with her in the spirit of unbounded joy. "Come! Let us run after the others. I want to run and dance and sing."

He still held her hand as they ran swiftly down the drive, followed closely by the faithful sergeant.

"You are an angel," he said in her ear. She laughed as she looked up into his face.

"Yes—a Persian angel," she cried. "It's so much easier to run well in a Persian angel's costume," she added.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A PRESCRIBED QUALITY.

"YOU are wonderful, standing out there all night watching for—us." He was about to say "me."

"How could any one sleep? Neenah found this dress for me. Aren't these baggy trousers funny? She rifled the late Mr. Wyckhoime's wardrobe. This costume once adorned a sultana, I'm told. I wore it tonight because I was which is more serious as a subject than I might have thought I gone to the wall as a prince."

"I like you best as the princess," he said, frankly studying her in the gray light.

"I think I like myself as the princess, too," she said naively. He sighed deeply. They were quite close to the excited group on the terrace when she said: "I am very, very happy now, after the most miserable night I have ever known. I was so troubled and afraid"—

"Just because I went away for that little while? Don't forget that I am soon to go out from you for all time. How then?"

"Ah, but then I will have Paris," she cried gayly. He was puzzled by her mood—but then, why not? What could he be expected to know of the moods of royal princesses? No more than he could know of their loves.

Lady Deppingham was got to bed at once. The princess, more thrilled by excitement than she ever had been in her life, attended her friend. In the sanctity of her chamber the exhausted young Englishwoman bared her soul to this wise, sympathetic young woman in Persian vestment.

"Genevra," she said solemnly in the end, "take warning from my example. When you once are married don't trifle with other men—not even if you should not love your husband. Sooner or later you'd get tripped up. It doesn't pay, my dear. I never realized until tonight how much I really care for Deppy, and I am horribly afraid that I've lost something I can never recover."

"You were not in love with Mr. Browne. That is why I can't understand you, Agnes."

"My dear, I don't understand myself. How can I expect you or my husband to understand me? How could I expect it of Bobby Browne? Genevra, you are in love—madly in love—with Hollingsworth Chase. Take my advice. Marry him. He's one man in a"— Genevra placed her hand over the lips of the feverish young woman.

"I will not listen to anything more about Mr. Chase," she said firmly. "I am tired—tired to death—of being told that I should marry him."

"But you love him." Lady Agnes managed to mumble despite the gentle impediment.

"I do love him yes, I do love him!" cried the princess, casting reserve to the winds. "He knows it—every one knows it. But marry him? No—no no! I shall marry Karl. My father, my mother, my—yes, my stepfather, have said so, and I have said it too. That ends it, Agnes. Don't speak of it again."

She cast herself down upon the side of the bed and clinched her hands in the fierceness of despair and—decision.

After a moment Lady Agnes said dreamily: "I climbed up the ladder to make a lady's slip of myself by marriage, and I find I love my husband. I dare say if you should go down the ladder a few rounds, my dear, you might be as lucky. But take my advice. If you won't marry Hollingsworth Chase, don't let him come to Paris."

The Princess Genevra lifted her face instantly, a startled expression in her eyes.

"Agnes, you forget yourself!"

"My dear," murmured Lady Agnes sleepily, "forgive me, but I have such a shockingly absent mind." She was asleep a moment later.

In the meantime Bobby Browne, disdaining all commands and entreaties, refused to be put to bed until he had related the story of their capture and the subsequent events that made the night memorable. He sat with his rigid arm about his wife's shoulders. Drusilla was stroking one of his hands in a half conscious manner, her eyes staring past his face toward the dark forest from which he had come. Mr Britt was ordering brandy for his trembling client.

"After all," said Browne, hoarse with nervousness, "there is some good to be derived from our experiences, hard as it may be to believe. I have found out the means by which Basula intends to destroy every living creature in the chateau." Chase threw off his spell of languidness and looked hard at the speaker. "Basula coolly asked me at one of our resting places if there had been any symptoms of poisoning among us. I mentioned

CAUSE FOR ALARM

Loss of Appetite or Distress After Eating Symptoms that Should Not be Disregarded.

Appetite is just a natural desire of the system for food necessary to replace natural body waste. Loss of appetite or stomach distress after eating indicates indigestion or dyspepsia. Over-eating is a habit very dangerous to a person's good general health, and insatiable appetite is a common symptom of diabetes.

It is not what you eat but what you digest and assimilate that does you good. Some of the strongest, heaviest and healthiest persons are moderate eaters.

There is nothing that will create sickness or cause more trouble than a disordered stomach, and many people daily contract serious maladies simply through disregard or abuse of the stomach.

We urge every one suffering from any stomach derangement, indigestion or dyspepsia, whether acute or chronic, to try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, with the distinct understanding that we will refund their money without question or formality, if after reasonable use of this medicine they are not satisfied with the results. We recommend them to our customers every day, and have yet to hear of any one who has not been benefited by them.

We honestly believe Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets to be without equal. They are made from the prescription of a physician who devoted his time to the study and treatment of stomach troubles. They give very prompt relief, stimulating the secretion of gastric juices, strengthening the digestive organs, aid to good digestion and assimilation, regulate the bowels, and promote nutrition.

We urge you to try a 25-cent box of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, which give 15 days' treatment. At the end of that time your money will be returned to you if you are not satisfied. Of course, in chronic cases length of treatment varies. For such cases we have two larger sizes, which sell for 50 cents and $1.00. Remember you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Charlevoix only at our store—The Rexall Store, The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.
